CITY OF BOSTON.

In School Committee, Boston, Sept. 14, 1875.

The following-named members were appointed to prepare the Annual Report of the School Committee for the year 1875, viz.: Messrs. Thayer, Perkins, Washburn, McDonald, Miss Peabody, Messrs. Norton, Hutchins, Ricker and Hayden.

Attest:

BARNARD CAPEN,

Secretary.

REPORT.

The committee to whom has been entrusted the duty of preparing the Annual Report of the School Board for 1875 beg leave to submit the following results of their observations upon the condition and needs of the public schools of the city.

They have been embarrassed, in the outset of their work, by the want of the semi-annual reports of a Superintendent, which have in past years given invaluable and indispensable aid to a right understanding of the state of the schools, and which, in the year just expiring, have been more necessary than ever, under the steady increase of those school details the proper legislation for which demands so much time from members of the School Committee that a fair and faihtful acquaintance with the operations of individual schools and classes could hardly be expected from busy men and women distracted by private pursuits.

The system of statistics inaugurated years ago has indeed been regularly continued; but, although figures are supposed to tell nothing but the truth, it is entirely possible that under an unpractised eye they should both fail to reveal the important facts and principles of educational progress which they are intended to suggest, and be distorted into declaring what they do not really indicate. It is only in the hands of practical educators that the varied data of annual school statistics can be made profitable to warn, direct and inspire those to whom is committed the oversight of public education; and therefore to the Superintendents, in all the important cities of the Union, has belonged the function of interpreting the full purport of columns of figures concerning the numbers of pupils, their ages, grades and promotions, the methods of classification, the average percentages of attainments, the cost of individual tuition, and the total expenditures for instruction which are "caviare to the general," and which, as the annual reports of the School Board for many years will bear witness, in the repeated arguments concerning the cost and worth of Boston schools, have been often seized upon by misguided or interested advocates and forced to deliver a testimony they would not legitimately present.

And not only in the domain of figures has a guiding intelligence for your committee been missed, but, in throwing light upon the effect of particular branches of study of comparatively recent introduction upon the general scholarship as well as the health of pupils; in determining how far the development of industrial training, in the departments which may be properly classed under that head, has proved compatible with the just demands of intellectual culture in this age when old standards are so sharply criticised; and, in short, of indicating, as can be shown by a competent specialist alone, who gives his entire time to the work, the extent to which the various parts of the school system are serving the interests of the whole community, rich and poor, not merely by standing upon a level with the schools of twenty or fifty years ago, but by keeping abreast of the wisdom of the age, — the judgment of a tried counsellor would have been of great service to your committee. For, although there is scarcely one of these problems which has not been admirably discussed in former Superintendents' reports, fresh phases of inquiry are constantly arising with the changes of the city population, with the passage of society through various industrial stages, especially from preponderating agricultural life to crowded villages devoted to manufactures and commerce, and with the detection by educators of mistakes and shortcomings which should be amended as soon as discovered. While it is certain that in educational affairs some things are fixed, it is equally plain that many other things are in a fluid, unsettled state, and the best-trained judgment of men experienced in the art of teaching, who are not suspected of having favorite hobbies, is needed to point out the revolutions and reforms, or the retreats which should be insisted upon in school methods, as well as to set forth in what respect there is reason for contentment with what has been attained.

COMPARATIVE WORTH OF OUR SCHOOL SYSTEM.

It is a question proper to be considered every year, for the benefit of the citizens who depend largely upon the judgment of their representatives in the School Committee for information concerning the status of public education, What is the comparative standing of Boston schools among those of the great cities of the Union? And especially is it of interest to tax-payers to learn how far, in the wisdom of fair-minded observers, the great and increasing expenditure for instruction is jutsified by substantial results of intelligence, morality and health; for these three elements enter with almost equal importance into a sound education. The history of the city shows conclusively that no spirit of niggardliness with regard to popular education will find any encouragement among the best citizens, and when, as frequently, attention is called to the cost of instruction, it may be generally assumed that the prevailing motive, among those whose questions are of any weight, is not of a disposition to save money at the expense of that department in which a false economy would be the worst of extravagance and folly, but to be enlightened as to the facts of the case.

An accurate comparison of the schools of the country is rendered difficult, if not impossible, by the lack of a uniform system of examination by any authoritative bureau.

The National Educational Commission is endeavoring to collect all possible information upon the subjects within its sphere of investigation; but it has existed too short a time, and has been hindered by too many obstacles, to have presented hitherto much that could help an inquirer to determine the relative merit of school systems like, e. g., those of Boston and St. Louis, or of Boston and New York.

The educational statistics of the several cities are upon so many different bases, that there is constant danger of misinterpreting their true bearing upon any particular point of investigation.

Yet some general facts may help elucidate the inquiry.

The estimate of impartial observers, both native and foreign, has been many times presented in former annual reports as uniformly bestowing the highest praise upon Boston schools.

But there is another sort of testimony which appears to the committee of great weight, and which has not been duly emphasized hitherto. The comparative attendance of the public and private schools indicates how far the school system of any city is performing its true function of meeting the needs of all social and intellectual grades of the community. In every city there are people of wealth who will have that which seems to them the best instruction for their children, and who, if this is not provided by the public schools, will seek it elsewhere. Now, it is a striking fact, which was presented in Mr. Philbrick's report for 1874, that authoritative statistics report a smaller number of pupils in private schools in the year 1873 than in the years 1817, 1830 and 1856. In other words, while the city has been rapidly growing in population, and while the mixed character of the public pupils naturally begets an increasing fastidiousness on the part of parents, which would presumptively draw away many children from the public schools, the figures show, if they are to be trusted, that parents are willing to overlook many minor social and moral disadvantages, in consideration that the average schools maintained by the city are better than average private schools.

The figures do indeed indicate that there are more pupils attending other than the public schools, than in former years; but the increase is in the direction of free sectarian schools, which are unhappily multiplying every year, to the serious detriment of the institutions supported by and for the whole people. The rise of such schools will hardly be claimed by any disinterested person to be attributable to a deterioration in the quality of our public instruction, however it may be alleged to originate in causes properly removable by future school committees.

In confirmation of the above view of the purport of the apparent decay of private schools, some comparison of Boston with other cities is important; the figures being taken from the report for 1874 of United States Commissioner Eaton.

The number of children enrolled in the Boston public schools was 53,752; the number in private schools, including the free sectarian schools, was 8,887; that is, the latter number to the former is in a ratio of one-sixth nearly. In New York the enrolled school population is 251,545, and in private schools 85,000 are reported, — a ratio of more than one-third. In Chicago the public pupils are 47,963; the private pupils 28,251, — more than one-half (.58); and in St. Louis, where allowance must be made for the lingering prejudices of race and color, there are 36,983 public pupils, and 21,789 private pupils, the ratio being nearly the same as in Chicago.

The significance of these facts cannot be too highly appreciated. If that be the most perfect system of public instruction in a democratic country which most fully meets the wants of rich and poor alike, the Boston system may claim to approach closer than any other, in any American city of magnitude, the ideal of democratic perfection. The patronage of private schools is habitually from the wealthy and cultivated classes, and any apparent testimony that the education proffered by the city is as good as, or better than, they can obtain elsewhere, is strong justification for allowing the cost of municipal education to exceed the expense in other places which can present no such claims. The best is the cheapest. Any cheapness which encourages class distinctions, and makes the public schools the resort chiefly of those who are too poor or too indifferent to results to go elsewhere, will, in the long run, do irretrievable damage to those interests of the land without which property would be of little value; and let it be remembered that the public school instruction is furnished at much lower rates than can be offered by any respectable private schools — (see the terms of the most prominent private institutions for an illustration), and that in a city where half or one third the children are to be paid for at the latter rates the actual outlay of money is far greater than under any public system, so that in truth the Boston schools give more for the money spent than any schools in the Union.

The same fact from another stand-point has been presented in former reports, viz., that in no other city in the Union of equal size is there so large a percentage of the school population found in regular attendance at school. Superintendent Harris, of St. Louis, in his report for 1874, places Boston far at the head of thirty-four cities in this respect; its percentage being 89, while St. Louis stands at 67, Chicago at 61, and New York at 54. This preponderance is largely due to the efficiency of our truant laws, but must also be in part ascribed to the co-operation of appreciative parents and guardians, whose sympathies, it is safe to say, would not have been gained under a less liberal and progressive administration. Thus, despite all criticisms and complaints, the silent testimony of the faith of citizens is that the cities which make the bravest show in the respect of cheapness of tuition are those whose educational systems are least worthy the confidence of all classes; and this is to be said in no disparagement of the efforts of those cities which, with a larger population than Boston and much less wealth, are laboring indefatigably to elevate their systems of instruction to the highest standard. In many features Boston has much to learn from the progressiveness of those Western communities which are prompt to entertain all new ideas and improvements, and many of whose educators stand in the foremost rank of their profession.

It is common to hear unfavorable contrast drawn betwixt the scholarship and fitness for practical life of graduates of the present and of former times, when studies were fewer and expenditures smaller. (Although it may be remarked, in passing, that fifty years ago the ratio of appropriations for school purposes to the entire cost of the City Government was twice as great as to-day.)

But it is difficult to discover any substantial facts to justify this vague opinion.

If we compare the grade of books studied in any class twenty years ago with those used by relatively the same class of to-day, it will appear that the children of 1875 are immeasurably superior in knowledge and mental power. Let those who will, read, from the Superintendent's report of 1874, the programme for the fourth grammar class of 1856, and then visit any respectable primary class of the higher grade and test its ability in the same branches. Let the testimony be taken of gentlemen who were ushers in those days, — that boys were often received into these classes who could not perform an example in long division, who were bad spellers and worse readers, ignorant of the first principles of composition, and not above the elementary geography.

In the report of the School Committee for 1847 it is striking to notice how uniform are such comments as these upon the majority of the lower grammar classes of the city: "The examination in reading showed a prevailing want of intelligence." "The appearance in grammar was poor." "The attendance is irregular." "Children are found," say the committee in their summary, "who have been a year or two years in the Grammar Schools, no farther advanced than when they were promoted from the Primary Schools." "In almost all the schools the examination in reading, while confined to the upper divisions of the first class (to which the attention of the masters is almost exclusively given), was in the highest degree satisfactory. As the examination was extended into the lower classes the result was far less satisfactory. Even in the lower divisions of the first class intelligent reading is comparatively rare." And the secret of this inferiority lay in the facts that, with the lack of system in teaching, no particular educational qualifications were required of the subordinate instructors, who were thought to do well if they could keep order and hear lessons (which are not identical with good teaching, though there are some who think they are). To-day, notwithstanding many grave faults in the methods of appointment of teachers, and the consequent employment in many districts of incompetent instructors, the standard of intelligence, refinement, and ability to impart information, is much higher than ever before. Intelligent work is applied to all the classes instead of being confined to a part of the first class. Careful classification now distributes the pupils into divisions suited to their attainments, and the energy of the instructor, instead of being scattered in ministering to the needs of children in almost as many different stages of progress as there are individuals, can be directed to the advancement of an entire room or section, bestowing upon thirty or fifty scholars the time once given to five or six; much labored memorizing has been abolished to the profit of the reasoning powers; many useless details of geography, grammar and history have been consigned to a proper neglect, while the work of the blackboard, globes, maps, and similar apparatus, which, in its full efficiency, is the development of later years, has immeasurably facilitated the power of the instructor to impart and of the child to receive an intelligent and permanent understanding of each day's lessons. Undoubtedly there were some advantages in the ancient order of things, when large and small were classed together, and the bright children could in their leisure moments listen to the recitation of those in advanced studies. Perhaps the bright children were brighter than those of our time; but so were the dull more neglected and abandoned to their stupidity, because the teacher was too full of cares to properly attend to them.

The question of the comparative health of pupils involves more uncertainty. Furnace-heated buildings, high pressure of studies, which unavoidably arises among large masses of pupils, in the rivalries of teachers, no matter how simple the system and wise the oversight; the excitement of life in a large city, with everything to stimulate and divide the child mind, and all the modern concomitants of civilization, — not the least of which are irregular eating and sleeping, for which the homes are responsible, — have doubtless wrought their ill effects upon the rising generation. But there is a more faithful attention to matters of school hygiene than ever before; ventilation and gymnastics are thought of as once they were not, and the medal and like fruitful systems of overwork and nervous exhaustion were long since cast out, so that it may, with good reason, be held that the school children, as a whole, are as vigorous and hale as were their city fathers and grandfathers. In so much of morality as is under control of the school hours, there will be improvement or retrogression, according to the social quality of the children. If these, in any district, are generally from refined and virtuous homes, there is reasonable presumption that under teachers, chosen with more care than in former years, their moral habits will be strengthened by the improved discipline and order of our schools. But the modern school is now called upon to teach many of the rudimentary virtues of which the homes are destitute; and children of vicious habits and coarse manners, who increase in number annually in the mixed population of a great city, gravely complicate the difficulties in the teacher's task of preserving a high moral tone in the mass of pupils.

CHARACTER AND QUALIFICATIONS OF OUR TEACHERS.

But in this incomplete comparison of the Boston schools of 1875 with those of other places and days, it is not well to forget the deficiencies which exist; one of the most important of which is in the character of our teachers. Your committee have to reiterate long-standing criticisms that many of these are far from what they ought to be, in view of the work which should be expected of them, and of the high salaries they receive. In many districts the standard of teachers' qualifications has been steadily lowered. Instead of selections being made from the best-educated applicants, especially from those of a normal-school training, or of an experience the equivalent of such training, considerations of sympathy for the candidate's poverty, of personal friendship, or of political influence, have decided the choice. Granted that, altogether, such selections are fewer than formerly, still they have existed to a most pernicious extent in schools which could least afford to suffer from them. It will probably be the work of the new Board to remedy some of these mischiefs, by substituting a systematic examination of all candidates for the position of teachers for the present lack of method. Whatever may be the opposition to applying business principles to the administration of political affairs, in our system of education there should be a most decided civil-service reform. The salaries of all teachers are none too high for the best order of educational skill, — cheap teachers are in the long run poor and costly teachers, — but with an unstinted expenditure we have a right to claim the very best available talent, and this can be obtained only by some forms of competitive examination, in which all applicants shall be made to show possession of good scholarship, aptitude for teaching, and refined manners and upright moral principles. It has been facetiously said in former years that the chief competition required of would-be teachers was one of pedestrianism, in running in search of members of District Committees. The substitution of a test of the qualities of head and heart of the applicant would save much annoyance of committees, and relieve the self-respect of candidates. We are not in danger of laying too much stress upon the importance of high abilities among instructors of all grades. The theory, so often combated, still prevails that in the lower classes of schools any person of average intelligence may be a competent teacher; but a wide observation will show that a degree of success satisfactory to the requirements of the age can be obtained in the long run only from those who are furnished with a solid basis of education. The best teacher of our Primary children is one who, other things being equal, knows the most. The work that wears, that bears scrutiny, and calls out the best powers of the child's mind, is that which is built upon the fullest resources of information and thoughtfulness; and, whatever the theory, it is certain that, with so many unquestionably good teachers available, there can be no apology for employing those persons who have taken no pains to learn the art of teaching. Common respect for the rights of the city would indicate that, among candidates, those should receive the preference who bore the best prima-facie credentials of fitness for the work. A young woman, e. g., who has graduated from both the High and the Normal Schools should have stronger claims for a teacher's place than one of no better promise in other respects, who has simply passed through a High or Grammar School. Examinations for appointment to the places of usher and sub-master should be very careful. The incumbents of these positions are in the line of promotion to masterships, sometimes to the exclusion of a healthful competition with superior educational talent from outside the city, and ought therefore to be chosen from among well-educated, broad-minded, progressive, ambitious young men who intend to make teaching a profession.

As a means of encouraging successful teachers of long service, and improving the quality of instruction by the infusion of new stimulus to energy and study among all teachers, there is need of a different system of gradations of rank from that which now exists. At present a teacher of two years' service in the Primary Schools receives the same salary as a Grammar teacher of ten or fifteen years' standing, save where the latter has won one of the few prizes of head-assistant. Age, experience, culture, and severe demands upon brain and heart, go for nothing. The young graduate of the Normal School will, in one year, be on an equality of pay, and, so far as any token of rank exists, of dignity, with the mature woman who has toiled conscientiously for many years to perform the most intelligent class work, and who has been steadily educating herself by reading, attending lectures and receiving private instruction. The unambitious teacher, who does no more than is necessary to keep her place until she finds some more congenial occupation, receives the same reward as she whose soul is in her profession, and whose influence over her children and her associates is of the most inspiriting and beneficent sort. We utter the opinion of the most judicious masters when we say that, while it may not be expedient to reduce the grade and pay of present incumbents, there should be a provision for the future, for keeping the pay of inexperienced and inferior teachers at the minimum rates, and giving the annual increase to those who, under competitive tests, should prove to be the ablest instructors. Then there would be an ambition to excel; incompetency would meet its reward: while there would be a considerable saving in the aggregate of salaries, since the lower classes, to which the new teachers are commonly assigned, are much more numerous than the higher classes.

HIGH SCHOOLS.

The reports of the sub-committees of the several High Schools indicate that these institutions have, in the main, performed a satisfactory work in the past year.

The Latin School has labored under some embarrassments, chiefly arising from the large influx of young pupils into the preparatory classes for whose formation authority was given last year. These have required more teachers than the distribution of the corps of instruction would properly allow, and many classes have been seriously overcrowded. The consequent demands upon the disciplinary power of the ushers and sub-masters have been so great as to seriously interfere with the more legitimate work of imparting knowledge, and many and frequent changes have been made among the subordinate teachers, some of whom bade fair to be most valuable officers.

In the English High School a most desirable reform has been instituted, in subjecting candidates for admission to a more thorough examination than in former years. Hitherto many members of the second Grammar classes, or those who could not pass the diploma examination of the graduating Grammar class have been received into the school, to the manifest injury of its intellectual character, and to the demoralization of the lower schools.

The department system, under which instructors go from class to class, instead of confining the work to a single room, has been applied to the upper classes, and has been found to accomplish good work. The application of this system has been under trial in some of the other schools, with considerable doubt in the minds of members of the committee as to its practicability, and the experiment in the English High School will be serviceable in throwing light upon the problem.

The restoration of a special examination for admission to the Girls' High School, after a year's trial of receiving the diploma of Grammar School graduation as a credential of fitness, is a subject of congratulation to the friends of education. The tendency has been to overcrowd this institution by young, immature girls, who would be better provided for in the Grammar Schools, and who after a little while have fallen out from inability to meet the requirements of their grade. The proper relation of the high to the lower schools is to incite them to more thorough and solid work, not to encourage them in a superficial training.

The question as to the form of the future High School system of the city has been opened to definite discussion by the appointment of two special committees to consider the expediency of establishing High Schools severally in East and in South Boston. The report of the first of these committees, in favor of the project referred to it, was adopted by the Board, but its execution received a check, in the refusal of the City Council to make the necessary appropriations. The South Boston committee did not think it advisable to take any action so long as the East Boston plan was in dispute. It may be doubted if the rapid passage of the order in favor of the East Boston school was the result of very mature deliberation by the Board; yet the present is an opportune time for considering whether our High Schools shall continue what those of the city proper have aimed to be, — great central institutions, monopolizing the higher instruction of our system, — or whether there shall be schools of a grade practically intermediate between these central institutions and the Grammar Schools. The tendency of education in all countries is, as in all departments of civilization, towards greater specialization or division of labor; the kinds of schools increase with the numbers, the separation of the Latin from the English High School being an illustration of this tendency.

Notwithstanding the strong arguments that have been and can be urged in behalf of thoroughly equipped and organized central schools, much can be said of the disadvantages of reaching those schools from remote parts of the city, and the consequent discouragement from continuing their studies of those youths who have graduated from the Grammar Schools, and who ought not to be left in idleness, or set at manual labor, or whose parents feel that they have a reasonable claim upon the city for facilities of higher education, which shall not involve the sacrifice of their children's health.

Your committee believe the problem would be somewhat simplified if the Grammar course were so enlarged as to retain pupils longer than it now keeps them. The desire on the part of scholars to obtain the éclat of going to the High Schools, and in the case of many teachers, not to be outdone by any of their neighbors in the number of their graduates sent to those schools, — a disposition which, to say the least, has not been discouraged by the School Board, — is accountable for much of the hurry and pressure that characterize the school life of the majority of pupils, and for the noticeable fact that so many graduating Grammar classes, particularly in girls' schools, seem composed of mere children, who are not of sufficiently ripe years to safely cease attending school, as many of them expect to do, nor much better suited to meet the demands upon body and mind of an advanced course. When the rudimentary principles of knowledge, as these are taught in the lower schools, are well established, it is time enough to attempt the higher branches; but many youths are pressed into the High Schools so ill-prepared fundamentally, that, even though they succeed in continuing to the end of the prescribed course of study there, as the majority cannot, they but lend confirmation to the wide-spread impression that our educational programmes sacrifice substance to show, and are less calculated to beget happy and useful citizens, with a support of good sense, than the simple studies of the olden time. By prolonging the hold of the Grammar School upon pupils there would be less need of additional High Schools, and the quality of High School education would be much improved.

Still there would be a residuum of pupils unable to journey long distances every day, and too far along in attainment to be kept in the Grammar classes, for whom some higher provision should be made. Such provision has been partially made by the already existing High Schools in the newly annexed territory, in Dorchester, Charlestown, etc.; and will it not be extended until all the suburban parts of the city shall have, perhaps not a High School, in the best sense of the term, — for this, in modern times, must be an elaborate and costly institution, — but a secondary High School, suitable to the needs of the middle classes, with whom compactness and brevity of course must be the desiderata?

NORMAL SCHOOL.

The Normal School has been laboring, as it were, with its right hand tied. The large majority of the training schools of the country have connected with them a model school, or school of observation, in which the prospective teachers shall daily come in contact with the children's minds, both in witnessing the operations of practical teachers and in acquiring the art of imparting knowledge. No Normal School is properly organized without such a department, and it is by no means creditable to the City of Boston that the sub-committee and the head-master have been so absorbed in contending for the right of the Normal School to have an existence with such accommodations as were begrudgingly eked out to it for its routine work, that no hopeful effort could be made to extend its instruction in a direction so indispensable to its usefulness.

Notwithstanding its hindrances its graduates have taken a high rank in the various corps of teachers to which they have been joined.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

The theory that the popular education best adapted to this country must combine with intellectual culture some form of industrial training, which shall enable youth to enter promptly upon the average practical duties of life, has, for some years, received encouragement in our schools in the only forms which appeared feasible, viz., in instruction in Sewing and Drawing.

The former was introduced into a few classes of girls' schools in 1854, and has been found to be of the highest advantage to the pupils, without seeming to interfere in the slightest degree with the long-established studies. The appointment of a standing committee on Sewing, in April last, bade fair to infuse a needful method and system into this department, and at the same time to afford light upon the extent to which the development of manual skill could be safely carried in all our schools. The report of that committee indicates that they were accomplishing valuable work in the prosecution of their examinations, when, in May, an opinion of the City Solicitor pronounced the employment of sewing-teachers illegal.

But a committee of the City Council, after a careful hearing upon the subject, reported in favor of petitioning the Legislature for authority to appropriate money for this purpose, and the unfortunate interruption of the good work promises to be only temporary.

Drawing has not by a considerable class of people been recognized as an industrial study, it being common to hear the phrase "ornamental branch" applied to it by members of the School Committee and masters, as well as by that portion of the general public who have vague notions that it still retains its ancient signification of the expenditure of valuable time over impossible landscapes and unnatural prancing horses, whose delineation had but an exceeding remote relation to the earning of an honest livelihood.

In truth, the systematic instruction in Drawing, which is yet in its infancy in America, may be considered one of the most intelligent and important additions to the practical education of the working-classes, whose children constitute so large a majority of our public pupils, which has been attempted in the history of education. The bane of society has always been in the mass of people who are destitute of any industrial skill. Our schools have furnished the heads tolerably, but have left the hands comparatively powerless, and hence have steadily sent into the active world multitudes who were sufficiently educated to be dissatisfied with their social stations, but who have had no capability of using their knowledge in improved forms of labor which should at once appease their reasonable ambition, and make them contented with being honest work-people.

It is said that the greater number of our poorer children intend to follow the trades of their fathers; but that is simply to assert that they are to swell the mass of crude labor which is equal to only the average brute drudgery of life, — to driving carts, carrying hods, shovelling in gravel-pits, and the performance of similar toil. We want those children to do better work than their fathers, and the use of the compass and pencil is one of the instrumentalities by which they are to find openings into the sort of skilled labor from which New England must draw its future prosperity as a manufacturing and mechanical community. The journeyman mason who can delineate and read plans is on the road to becoming a master mason; the carpenter who is not obliged to work by "rule of thumb," but can interpret the architect's sketch into the language of his trade, and can express in lines and shadows his own conceptions of a building, is in the order of promotion to the dignity of a contractor; and the operatives upon textile fabrics, who have learned the principles of design, may hope to take the place of and receive a share of the high salaries at present paid to the imported designers upon whom our manufacturers have been absolutely dependent. There are numerous trades from which France, Switzerland and Germany derive an ample revenue, and whose products are liberally bought by our New England people, which might increase the comfort and thrift of thousands of our own households were the children possessed of the technical education by which they could artistically and tastefully combine forms and colors. The supply of this education is the great object of the study of Drawing. The moral elevation which results from familiarity with beauty and grace in nature and art is also a considerable element in the instruction, not to be undervalued, but the most hopeful immediate consequences are to be looked for in the improved efficiency of American artisans, whose field of opportunity will be enlarged in proportion as their fingers are trained to deftly execute the commands of an observing eye; eye and hand being especially educated in Drawing.

Our schools are at present laboring under the disadvantage of having to concentrate in a few years the work which, in the future, after the teachers have acquired the necessary principles of the art, and the Grammar pupils have brought from the Primary instruction the elementary skill which most of them have now to gain in the Grammar classes, will be evenly distributed over many years. Hence many complaints of high pressure, which come most frequently from those districts whose teachers have from the beginning looked with most distrust upon Drawing. Possibly, in the attempt to make up lost time, more energy has been put into the instruction, in some instances, than was altogether wise; the fact that in this branch the examinations have been more systematic and inflexible than in any other department, except Music, having a tendency to stimulate teachers to an excellence which, under less urgent motives, they have not sought in the ordinary studies. But the obvious corrective of this fault is in extending the system of examinations, of which the enthusiastic supervisors of Music and Drawing have set the example, to all other departments, so that the symmetry of uniform excellence shall be established.

Complaints occasionally come to the ears of the committee of the labor and anxiety imposed upon many children by the necessity of making original designs out of school; but possibly many parents and committees will recall the arduous struggles, amid tears and sighs, with which they were once forced to write original compositions, the mastery of the art of putting thought on paper being counted worth some pains of even the dullest youth.

While there are doubtless many imperfections in our present system of instruction in Drawing, largely arising from the rapidity of its introduction, and the inevitable strain upon an educational machinery not fully adapted to meet its requirements, it seems clear to your committee that the evils are only incidental and temporary, and that the culture of the coming generations will bear witness to the vast advantages which are in germ in the art-knowledge just opening to the youth of our common schools.

KINDERGARTEN SCHOOLS.

The report of the Committee on Kindergarten Schools speaks warmly of the success of the single experiment of this kind of a school, and urges the establishment of a few other schools in the most crowded portions of the city. Their statements deserve careful consideration, for although there are strong doubts among thoughtful educators concerning the feasibility of adding to our expensive system a class of instruction which has been hitherto relatively costly and complex, and although the wisdom of legislation in assigning five years as the minimum age at which the public could afford or ought to take charge of the child mind has seemed to fix a safe boundary over which only private beneficence should step, yet it is well to consider whether any experiment can be too costly, if it be not extravagant, or any innovation upon traditional precedent too bold, if it be not rash, which affords a possible barrier against the stream of vice and crime whose source is largely among neglected children under legal school age. The present School Board proposed to approach the problem of Kindergarten instruction in a modest way, by establishing only three schools, in the poorest and most thickly settled districts; but the City Council saw fit to question the wisdom of the undertaking.

Perhaps the new Board may give the subject a full reconsideration, and, should their judgment endorse that of their predecessors, it is hoped that another City Government may approve the trial of an experiment which has much promise of good.

Your committee can congratulate the Board and the public, that not only as a whole has the Boston school system suffered no deterioration in character during the year, whether compared with its former standard or with the progress of other cities, but that it has been steadily adjusting its methods to the new educational ideas of the age. There is much work to be done yet in pruning away old limitations. We have yet to make many advances in the art of teaching the simplest branches of a school education, and in that progress it will be frequently found that time and strength have been quite as greatly wasted over some parts of Arithmetic, Grammar and Geography, as many conservative people fear they are likely to be over Science, Music and Drawing. But the experience of the past indicates that both committees and teachers will be as prompt and unsparing in the banishment of old defects, and as zealous in welcoming any well-demonstrated improvements, as they will and ought to be in holding fast to whatsoever has borne the test of trial, and is stamped with the approval of generations of intelligent, sagacious and virtuous men and women, who have put the knowledge of the school into the work of life.

REPORT

COMMITTEE ON THE BOSTON NORMAL SCHOOL

FOR THE

School Year Ending August 31, 1875.

BOSTON NORMAL SCHOOL.

The close of another year adds testimony to the value and the success of this school. Teachers and pupils have striven together for the best results. A graduating class of fifty-eight has been added to the list of approved candidates for positions as teachers in the public schools.

In addition to other branches, the members of this class go out with "teachers' certificates" in Drawing.

The great need of the school continues to be a suitable opportunity for the pupils to observe and practise in connection with their theoretical study and discussion. It is hoped that this want may be supplied at an early day.

The following regulations for the Normal School have been adopted by the School Committee: —

REGULATIONS OF THE BOSTON NORMAL SCHOOL.

SECTION 1. The Boston Normal School is established for the purpose of furnishing an opportunity for such young women as wish to become teachers, to receive a thorough course of distinct professional instruction, and to fit themselves for teachers in the public schools of Boston.

SECT. 2. The teachers shall be a head-master, who shall be a graduate of a college in good standing, a head-assistant, and as many assistants as may be found necessary, provided the number of assistants shall not exceed one for every thirty pupils. Special instruction in Music and Drawing shall be given in this school, in the same manner as is provided for the High Schools of the city, under the direction of the committees on these departments.

SECT. 3. Candidates for admission must signify in writing their intention to teach. A diploma of graduation from either of the Boston High Schools shall be considered evidence of qualification for admission. Candidates not graduates of the Boston High Schools must pass a satisfactory examination in the ordinary High School studies, and must present evidence of good moral character. No candidate shall be admitted to this school who is not at least seventeen years of age, except by special vote of the committee of the school.

SECT. 4. The sessions of this school shall begin at nine o'clock, A. M., and close at two o'clock, P. M., except on Saturdays, when there shall be no session.

SECT. 5. The plan of study shall be arranged for one year. Pupils who have attended for that period, and who have completed the course of study in a manner satisfactory to the committee of the school, shall be entitled to receive a diploma.

SECT. 6. The course of study in this school shall be as follows: —

1. Mental and Moral Science, and Logic.

2. History and Principles of Education, School Management, and Methods of Instruction.

3. Physiology and Hygiene.

4. Physics and Natural History with reference to objective teaching.

5. Study of Language: its history, acquisition and analysis.

6. Grammar School Studies with reference to teaching.

7. Drawing and its use as a means of illustration in teaching and Vocal Music.

8. Observation and Practice in Primary and Grammar Schools.

SECT. 7. The text-books used in this school shall be such of the text-books used in the other public schools of the city as are needed for the course of study, and such others as shall be authorized by the School Board.

SECT. 8. Any graduate of this school shall have the preference where teachers are to be employed in the public schools, other things being equal; and such graduate, who is also a graduate of a public High School of this city, when so employed, shall receive the same salary for her first and subsequent years of service that others receive for the second and subsequent years.

In the foregoing regulations the School Board has clearly expressed a conviction of the importance of a more thorough preparation on the part of those who are to teach. The minimum qualification for admission to the Normal School is the full High School course. It is hoped that many will exceed this, — that they will take a fourth or even fifth year of general study. Having done this, it is presumed that those who intend to teach will enter the Normal School for a year of close and careful professional study. Here they return to the Primary and Grammar School studies, which are thoroughly reviewed with reference to the best methods of teaching them to others. Higher branches are reviewed in the same light, and the most enlightened theories of education are discussed, together with the best methods of instruction, and the proper motives and incentives to be employed by the teacher in securing the best scholarship and the highest moral character.

It is hoped that the preference given to the graduates of this school, in the slight increase in salary for the first years of service, will induce all who are to teach to take this year of special preparation. The additional one hundred dollars is not intended as an inducement to any to shorten their course of academic study, but simply as an expression of the judgment of the committee, that, whenever the academic course is completed, there should follow a year of peculiar training for a peculiar and sacred work, and the further judgment, that, when thus prepared, young women are worth more as teachers than others without such preparation.

Normal Schools were established in Prussia in 1735. They are now common in all parts of Germany, for the education of teachers for the higher as well as the lower grades of schools. Such schools have been established in England, France, Holland, and all the more enlightened countries of Europe.

March 10, 1838, Hon. Edmund Dwight, a citizen of Boston, offered the State of Massachusetts ten thousand dollars, provided the Legislature would appropriate an equal amount for the purpose of establishing a Normal School. The offer was accepted, and the first Normal School in America was opened at Lexington, Mass., under Cyrus Pierce, with three pupils, July 3, 1839. This school was subsequently removed to West Newton, and is now located at Framingham.

There are now more than one hundred regularly organized Normal Schools in the United States, with an aggregate of more than fifteen thousand young men and young women under professional training for teachers. Massachusetts has five such schools, supported by the State. Most of the larger cities in the United States support schools for the special preparation of their teachers.

Official information has recently been received, at the Bureau of Education at Washington, that the government of the Argentine Republic of South America has adopted a scheme for the establishment of a Normal School in every State of the Republic.

A letter just received in Boston, from Harpoot, Eastern Turkey, Asia, has this sentence: "The Normal School continues to prosper, and is gradually raising the standard of education, and directing the attention of leading men to the importance of having better teachers and better schools."

The committee indulge the hope that the time is not distant when all who seek positions in any of the public schools of Boston — High Schools and Latin School included — will be expected to give evidence of a knowledge of the best methods of presenting subjects, as well as of the subjects themselves.

With improved facilities for the education of teachers, and an able Board of examination and superintendence, together with improvements which it is presumed that the incoming School Board will be able to make, the Committee feel that the second national century, which opens with 1876, must give increasing promise of good to this ancient and goodly city of Boston.

The Committee of the Public Latin School wish that they could employ, in making this their final report, only the language of unqualified approbation. The condition of the school is indeed in certain respects most encouraging. The number of its scholars was never before so large. The wise action of the School Board provided additional teachers for the overcrowded lower classes, without disturbing the organization of the upper part of the school, in which the number of pupils remained relatively small. In the selection of these teachers all possible care has been exercised. It is to be regretted that the development of the new plan of work which was begun five years ago continues in many respects incomplete. In making so extended a change, certain hindrances and delays were, however, of necessity expected. But it is especially in regard to the discipline and control of the rooms, and the bearing of the boys toward their instructors, that serious dissatisfaction must be expressed. An unwise deference to mere sentimentalism has taken away from the younger classes the simple and well-guarded punishment which the rules of the Board prescribe for all pupils of their age who offend. Thoughtless and ill-mannered boys, of nine years and ten, care little for the penalties which form the only remaining resort. When the authority of a good and capable teacher is weakened, and the comfort and progress of the great body of well-meaning scholars are threatened, that two or three children of this class may escape punishment, the result is as mortifying as it is deplorable. Upon the older boys of the school other unfavorable influences have been at work. Incontestably superior as the plan of departmental teaching is for schools of this grade, its adoption involves the sacrifice of certain real advantages, and especially the lessening of that personal relation between teacher and learner which the opposite system permits. If under the new method the influence of an instructor of great power reaches every pupil, the harm that a weak or indifferent teacher brings is not limited to a single room, but extends throughout the school, discouraging his colleagues and impairing their success. It is indeed an important incidental gain, that departmental instruction exacts uniformity of training, attainments and ability among instructors, and that it quickly and effectively winnows out dull and incompetent men. The remedy for the evils to which reference has been made is only to be found in a more careful choice of teachers, and in their thorough and adequate preparation for this difficult branch of professional work.

The lack of teachers duly trained for the duties of this school is the first and the most important obstacle which it has to meet. In this respect it suffers in common with every college and higher school in the country. Those familiar with its history will remember how the supply of instructors was in former times maintained. There were then but two permanent teachers; to these were added from time to time recent graduates of Harvard, — in most instances old members of the school, who came to try their skill in teaching for two or three years before entering upon other pursuits. Imperfect as this plan was, it secured certain advantages. The younger men had been brought up in the ways of the school; they felt a personal concern for its success. If they developed no aptitude for teaching, there was little difficulty in supplying their places with fresh aspirants. When, however, the effort was made, several years ago, to organize the school on a more permanent basis, and to provide for it a full corps of instructors, these incidental advantages were lost. The limited supply of trained men with fair ability was keenly felt. For certain departments it remains almost impossible to find suitable candidates.

A second great embarrassment is the want of sympathy shown by many parents for the plan of work at the school. No complaint against the Latin School had been oftener repeated than the well-merited one, that it neglected everything but Greek and Latin. Yet no sooner was the attempt made to introduce a truly liberal plan of study, to establish a generous course of history, modern as well as ancient, to teach English classics and our mother tongue, to provide elementary instruction in the natural sciences, to add a second modern language, with drawing, music and gymnastics, than the very persons who had declaimed against the antiquated methods of the Latin School, and had criticised its narrow course of study, were found complaining that it attempted too much, and contrasting it unfavorably with certain private schools, that make life easy for boys, by teaching just Latin, Greek and Mathematics enough "to get into college." It cannot be denied that there exists some foundation for the complaint of overwork in the Latin School. From the amount and character of the work which is to be accomplished with boys of the age in question, this risk presents itself in every school of high rank. To modify and control it by careful bodily discipline, by opportunities for play and recreation, by improved methods of teaching, must be the constant effort of those in charge. The remedy for this evil lies not in the abandonment of branches of study which ought to form part of every plan of liberal education, nor yet in prolonging the period of school-work beyond those years which the majority of boys can give to school, but far more in that better training of teachers to which reference has just been made. If the business of the school-room be not instruction, but only hearing scholars recite, while the child is expected to do all his studying at home, with little or no guidance, the result must inevitably be the overtasking of mind and body. On the other hand, skilful teaching in the school-room, stimulating the scholar's attention, and pointing out to him the means of progress, will make the hours out of school far more profitable, and much less tiresome.

It may not be out of place to consider the way in which this ever-recurring difficulty of out-of-school work is met in various countries. At the great English schools, the tutor, of whose family the given boy is a member, conducts the study, not infrequently rehearses the recitation, before the pupil appears in school. In the Lycées of France, professors give instruction for four hours daily, while for six or seven other hours both boarding and day scholars are under the charge of an usher (maître d'études), who superintends not only the preparation of lessons, but also the recreation of the boy, and his meals. In Germany, where a successful student in the upper classes of a great school must often, as in our rival academies of Andover and Exeter, devote to his studies from ten hours to eleven every day, school lasts from four to five hours. For the remaining home study, some older scholar, hired by parents, gives the needed aid, if the family, for any reason, are unable to supply it.

Three years ago a change was made in the age required for entrance into the Latin School, by which boys were received, as in former times, at nine years, in accordance with the long-established custom of the best foreign schools. Upon the continuance of this practice the external prosperity of the school, and the ability to instruct its scholars to their greatest advantage, largely depend. Much opposition has been made to the plan. In the judgment of many intelligent members of the School Board all children in the public schools ought to pursue their studies together till they are twelve years of age or older, and only after that period should those who are intended for higher education enter the great schools. The excellent schools of Switzerland are thus arranged; and in countries where the families from which the children come are so nearly alike in home influence, in intellectual development, and in social relations, as among the Swiss, such a system must well meet the public needs. But if at our Latin School the age of admission be raised to twelve years or more, the interest of the boys as pupils destined for full education must suffer, for reasons inherent in the organization of the lower schools. These latter are so arranged that they shall seek the greatest good of all scholars, of those who fall out in the way no less than of others who complete the term. Such a course is dictated by high motives of public duty. In the great schools very opposite conditions are found. There the plan of work must be such as to offer to those who finish the course the very best possible training, and it is imperative that that plan be drawn up mainly in the interest of these scholars. On no other condition can the school maintain an honorable rank among those of similar grade. If, then, the more advanced age at admission be made the rule, pupils who pass through the lower schools will waste valuable time upon a course of study which bears little relation to that of their succeeding years, while a great number of parents, whose position permits them liberty of choice, will be led by the facts which have just been stated, to select for their sons, in the earlier years, some one of the various private schools. Received there, this latter class form attachments, and are commonly lost to the public schools. To leave in the great schools only those who have no power to go elsewhere would be a serious public loss, and would in effect render a verdict against those schools.

In these suggestions no attempt is made to prejudge the very important educational problem as to the proper age for introducing scholars to the study of language. For many years boys of fifteen and upwards have applied to the Latin School for an irregular course of instruction, including little beside Greek and Latin, their wish being to pass through the school in one or two years. The proficiency which many of these boys have gained in classical knowledge has seemed to some observers to tell strongly against the supposed necessity for an early initiation into this class of studies. It must be admitted that the greater age of these students and the consequent necessities of their position have given them with their maturity of powers an earnestness of purpose, which has largely contributed to this result. It is, moreover, believed that, in many instances, remarkable success on the part of such scholars is due to a previous study of some modern language beside their own. Yet the late head-master, while earnestly advocating the admission of younger boys on the ground above stated, was convinced that the elementary study of Latin should be early begun. A question of this kind is too purely professional to warrant the committee in treating it in farther detail.

There is gratifying proof of increasing interest in the gymnastic teaching. The importance of maintaining this instruction in every public school, but especially in one of this kind, can hardly be overstated. For many reasons there ought to be some medical control of these exercises. But the need of medical oversight is even more evident in other directions. Every day eyes are injured by the disregard of the plainest dictates of school hygiene as to the admission of light. The desks and seats of pupils are made of the same height, whether the occupant be five feet tall or six. Deformed backs and shoulders are a natural consequence. The warming apparatus is under such wretched control that on many days the air of the school is wholly unfit to breathe. The extent of territory from which the scholars of the Latin School, the English High School and the Girls' High School are sent is so great that none of these schools can hold more than one daily session. To growing boys and girls the injury which results from such an arrangement of time is of incalculable moment. Children who have an early breakfast grow hungry at one o'clock. To delay eating till two hours later, as under this plan many of them must, is a great bodily wrong. The habit of crowding the severer mental tasks into one half of the day is an act of almost equal folly. Whatever the fondness of teachers for a single long session, whatever the preference of children or of their parents, this practice ought, in the interest of mental and bodily health, to be at once given up. With the present extent of the city territory, the only adequate remedy for these evils lies in providing for distant scholars dinners at cost, to be taken after a morning session of moderate length. At the Institute of Technology such a scheme is already under trial.

It is a significant fact that the school law of the kingdom of Italy, of late growth as that is, secures constant medical supervision for each little group of schools throughout that country, while the value of such inspection is among us as yet hardly recognized.

The Latin School has a dirty, unattractive, inconvenient school-house, situated in a part of the city ill adapted to the wants of the school. It is far too scantily furnished with means of illustration, with maps, models, cabinets, or a library. It should be one of the first cares of the School Board to secure for this school a thoroughly desirable site, to erect for it an attractive and commodious building, and to supply it with ample means of illustrating its teaching. Were this accomplished, the instant growth of the school in public favor, and its increase in usefulness, would amaze even its warmest friends and well-wishers. With scarcely an exception, those interested in its welfare disapprove the proposal to unite it in any form with either of the remaining High Schools. They believe it well worth while to maintain the separate existence of the Latin School, its honorable traditions, and its individual course of study. A corresponding feeling is thought to be as warmly cherished by the graduates and admirers of the English High School.

In the autumn of 1875 Messrs. W. H. White and F. W. Freeborn were appointed ushers. These gentlemen had for several years preceding been principals, respectively, of the Brooks Grammar School in Medford and the High School in Hyde Park, Massachusetts. They were not finally chosen as instructors until the qualifications of a great number of candidates had been carefully weighed. Professor Freeman Snow, a graduate of Harvard University, who had for some time been a teacher of history in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, has assumed similar duties in the Latin School, with the grade of master. It is earnestly hoped that instruction in history, which plays so important a part in furnishing and in quickening a child's mind, has by this choice been at last firmly established at the school.

In the early days of 1876 Francis Gardner, headmaster for nearly twenty-five years, closed a long and honorable life. Himself a graduate of the school, he had, during a period of forty-five years, labored for it as usher, sub-master and head-master. Many generations of his pupils bear grateful witness to his faithful efforts in their behalf, to his extended and accurate scholarship, and his self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of the school. It will not be easy to find for the place which he leaves vacant a successor as highly trained and equally single-hearted in the performance of every duty.

HENRY S. WASHBURN,
Chairman of the Latin School Committee.

NOTE. — It is proper for the Chairman to state that portions of the above report were prepared, at his request, by a member of the committee, and that for some of the opinions expressed, and especially for the criticisms offered upon the state of discipline in the school, that writer is alone responsible.

ENGLISH HIGH SCHOOL.

The English High School started in September, 1874, with 603 pupils. At the end of the school year, in June, 1875, there were 492 in attendance.

This diminution in the number of pupils is easily explained. Many boys enter the school with no intention of completing its course. They wish to acquire one or two branches of knowledge taught there, and they come for these; or their parents or guardians send them for safe-keeping in the dangerous period of transition from boyhood to early manhood, and for the finishing touch which the High School is supposed to give to a boy's education. Such boys seldom stay to undergo the examinations for promotion, which take place at the end of the school year. In view of this practice, we are led to ask the question: "Would the school suffer thus constantly from the yearly dropping out of its pupils, if the real value of the High School course were known?"

The answer to this question would depend upon another: "What in reality is the High School doing for its scholars?"

The prescribed course of studies will show what it aims to do, and acquaintance with its teachers encourages the hope that a really high training for the mind might be secured with these advantages. But a tabular view and a corps of teachers are not enough. There must be a competent body of pupils to be educated, and an enlightened public opinion sustaining the masters, in order to secure a thorough High School training. The popular impression that any boy of suitable age may attend the public schools of this grade, and ought to be admitted without much searching of his qualifications, is not favorable to their success. The common opinion that a short term at the High School will make a good ending to a boy's public school career, like the farce succeeding the play, may do very well as a farce, but only as a farce. No; the High School is not bound, simply because it is maintained at the public expense, to admit any boy whom anybody may choose to send to its doors. It confers all the general benefits the community at large has a right to demand, when it holds up the standard and ambition of the Grammar Schools. This is no small advantage, and no imaginary service. In this benefit the scholars in all the public schools have a share. But the High School in its true estate has a special vocation within its own walls. If the object of the public school system is, in its earlier departments, to diffuse knowledge, in the High School its business is to concentrate it. Men of average intelligence, and men of exceptional ability, are equally needed by the State. Its system of education should be adequate to produce both kinds of men. Its Primary and Grammar Schools are enough for the former, and their methods should conform to their purpose. But the High School has another mission. It should devote its energies to training superior talent, and it should not be embarrassed in this great work by inferior material among its pupils, or unreasonable claims from the people at large. Its first necessity is a high standard, both of admission and promotion.

It seems hardly necessary to say that High Schools cannot be maintained by low standards. And yet, one of the first and most pressing duties of the committee this year was to protest against a repetition of the action of the School Board of last year, by which candidates were admitted to the High Schools without passing a special examination. The School Committee wisely refused to repeat this mistake, and appointed a special committee to prepare examination papers, to be used for admission to all the High Schools of the city. Doubtless this action diminished the number admitted to these schools, but the advantage of the change is already felt, in the improved quality and working ability of those who have been admitted.

We believe that a correct view of the province of education in this grade of schools would greatly assist the effective administration. Once establish the truth, that High Schools are only for the training of superior minds, and the work becomes simplified and clear. The proper candidates for such culture may easily be known, in advance of the usual date of their graduation from the Grammar Schools, and they might with advantage be brought under High School instruction at an earlier age than is customary now. Grammar School boys who have attained a certain rank, or shown superior mental endowment, might be sent to the High School a year or two earlier, and thus, by prolonging the course in the latter school, the boys would graduate as early as before, and be further advanced in their studies. Many bright children, who do not come at all to the High School under the present system, would do so, if they could come earlier, and, once there, might be persuaded to complete the course. Meantime the Grammar Schools would find their ample recompense for passing on some of their best scholars thus early, in the prospect of keeping them under instruction for a longer time than is now usual, and in the solid satisfaction of giving to those who remained to finish their course with them a Grammar School training which would be complete in itself, shaped by the knowledge that it would be the last schooling its pupils would receive.

It has long been known that many boys in the second class in our Grammar Schools are able to pass as good examinations for admittance to the High Schools as members of the first class. Until this year, when it was specially guarded against by a vote of the Board instructing us not to admit to examination any member of a Grammar School without a certificate of character and qualification from the master of the school he last attended, quite a number of candidates from these lower classes were admitted. This year the special rule excluding them was scrupulously observed.

But why should such a rule be passed, if it is not the fact that many children ready to profit by higher instruction are kept back by the policy or prudence of their teachers? Granted that the policy or prudence is often justified by a better knowledge than any outside observer can possess; still, would not these teachers agree to an earlier transfer of some of their pupils, whom nature has chosen for superior culture, if they could be sure that in so doing these bright boys would secure a High School training, and in the end profit more by the earlier exchange of schools? Speaking from the stand-point of a High School Committee, we cannot but believe that our work would be better done, if our special culture could be earlier begun, and our pupils selected solely on the evidence of natural fitness for the best mental training.

From the reports made to us by the teachers, and from our own observation, we believe that our school suffers, not from too much instruction, but from too many studies. It seems a singular policy, hardly warranted by the real advance in our pupils' mental development, to increase the number of studies just when the studies themselves increase in difficulty. The effect is, that while each teacher aims to provide all the instruction required by the bill of fare, the scholar only profits by so much as he can take and "inwardly digest." No teacher reports all the studies as equally well taught or learned.

His own interest naturally affects his teaching, and it is easy to discover a teacher's favorite study by his report of his scholars' comparative progress. This is so obvious and so natural, that we have taken advantage of it in the first and advanced classes of the school, and introduced the system of departmental instruction. "By it, each teacher gives every scholar his best," says Mr. Seaver; and he adds that he has "no doubt of the complete success of this plan of instruction, even in its first year."

The following account of the study of English Literature, as conducted by Mr. Anderson, will give an idea of the method pursued under the system: —

"The text-book selected for the class was Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' a poem that seemed to have the requisite interest of plot and story, an abundant vocabulary employed in formulating the higher kinds of thought, and containing also a practically unlimited supply of allusions, similes, and metaphors, and thus well calculated to please and benefit a class of boys at an age when the imagination is most active.

"The first three or four weeks of the term were spent in studying the life and times of Milton. At the present time we have nearly completed the first canto. The course of study has been, in part, as follows: 'The Invocation' was read, and carefully analyzed. The class was required to read corresponding portions of translations of the other great epics, Pope's, Bryant's, and Chapman's 'Iliad,' Dryden's 'Æneid,' Wright's Dante's 'Divina Commedia,' Tasso's 'Jerusalem Delivered,' etc., and then write an essay on 'The Invocation.' At times, lists of words most commonly used in expressing the higher forms of thought have been selected from the poem, and sentences constructed, an effort being made to have no forced constructions, but to have the word used in harmony with the thought expressed. Milton's conception, as given in different parts of the poem, of the division of the universe into Heaven, Hell, Chaos, and the 'Starry Universe' has been carfully developed by diagrams and descriptions, and is reserved as a subject for a future essay.

"Whenever, in the course of our reading of the text, an allusion is made to classic or other mythology, or any book, or any matter that needs investigation to understand, the class has been required to look it up, and either give it orally, or write upon the subject-matter of the allusion.

"During 'study hours,' as arranged upon the 'plan of study,' the boys are allowed to consult any book of reference in the hall. Fortunately, during the last six or seven years, the school has secured a fairly good library of reference, imperfect as yet, but in process of completion. Mr. Seaver proposes to place in each room a collection of books sufficient for ordinary reference. When this is done, the machinery of the department will be in good working order."

Mr. John P. Brown, thus describes his method of teaching French: —

"My work with the first class during September, October, and two weeks in November, was confined to French. I had three recitations a week with each of the four divisions; two recitations in the 'Otto,' and the other a translation into French of a story of Erckmann-Chatrian. In that time, the class has gone through, with great thoroughness, the first ten lessons in the second part of 'Otto.' The work has not consisted simply of recitations from the book. I have very seldom required the memorizing of the cumbersome rules with which 'Otto' is filled, but where it was necessary have simplified them, and impressed the principles upon the scholars by making them give their own interpretation of whatever was obscure, or difficult of application, in the rule of the book. I have varied the exercise, from time to time, by making up examples on the moment myself, or by requiring the boys to make their own English, so as to compel them to make their own application of the rules. Since the middle of November, I have had only one recitation for each division of the class. In that time we have managed to discuss pretty thoroughly the Eighteenth Lesson of 'Otto,' which I have taken out of order, because of its present great importance.

"Besides the 'Otto,' as I have stated, the class have had an exercise in translation into French. I make the English for them, which they translate mentally at home, or during a study hour. At the beginning of the recitation each boy is furnished with a clean piece of paper, and translates from the English on the board so much as is required of him. The papers are passed and corrected, so far as time allows, the boys having a good deal of freedom in discussing errors. The papers are collected, examined and marked; a day or two after, the original French is put on the board, copied with special regard to penmanship, and learned by heart, for Mr. Dracopolis, who holds a conversation on all the incidents of the story."

We have also introduced chemistry and German among the studies of the first class. The remarkable progress which the advanced class has made for several years in the knowledge and use of the German language under Mr. Babson's instruction, and the great interest and increasing value of this study, have led us to offer an opportunity for the same instruction to the first class. We hope that a taste of German and chemistry given in the closing year of the regular course will incline more of the young men to remain and take the advanced course.

The generous and discreet action of the City Council, by which our school has been furnished with an excellent laboratory and lecture-room, has given a new impulse to the study of chemistry. Mr. Lincoln, who has charge of this department, says, that applications have been received from forty-five, nearly half of the first class, to enter the laboratory and pursue as partially extra work a practical course of chemistry.

We would also express our hearty appreciation of the disposition of the School Board and the City Council to provide for our other needs. The difficulty of conducting a school of our dimensions in two buildings, quite far apart, is constantly felt, and compels us to ask for some privileges which would not otherwise be needed. We are pleased to acknowledge the courtesy and kindness by which our head-master has been provided with a messenger and clerk, to assist him in his varied work, of correspondence and keeping accounts, and in carrying messages from one room or school-house to another, or to various parts of the city. This will prove a real economy of the valuable time and teaching ability of our head-master, and also of the time of the pupils.

It would be a great advantage if we could have a hall large enough to accommodate the whole school, for its united exercises. Aside from the moral and disciplinary uses of such an audience-room, it seems necessary for the best conduct of many studies, especially music and declamation. Every public Saturday gives new emphasis to our need of a larger hall. As business crowds more and more upon our precincts, bringing the roll and jar of its traffic into the quiet atmosphere, which is more favorable for study, we sigh daily for a larger and more commodious building, in a more retired spot.

But, despite these impediments and the natural obstacles which prevent the perfect fulfilment of our best plans and hopes, we can congratulate the School Board and our fellow-citizens upon the thriving and hopeful condition of the English High School.

Very respectfully submitted,

GEO. L. CHANEY,
Chairman.

GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL.

The Committee on the Girls' High School respectfully submit the following report, and are happy to state that the school is in a generally satisfactory condition.

The experiences peculiar to each new year, and the added weight which they give to reasons for or against measures adopted or projected, point to the elimination of elements proved to be hurtful or doubtful, and recommend the adoption of new courses, reasonably supposed to be advantageous. It is by this double process that progress is secured, and the standing of the school slowly raised to a higher plane than that which it has hitherto occupied.

It is a matter of regret to your committee that a preparatory class, the formation of which was recommended in their last report, has not yet been authorized in connection with the school. Added experience has only served to strengthen the conviction that such a class, if formed annually to meet a temporary need, would be extremely advantageous. Candidates, of the requisite age and general attainments, each year present themselves for admission to the school, who, for want of proper training in one or more studies, are unable to pass their examinations. All that they want is a short course of training in the studies in which they are deficient. This they would get if they could be placed in a preparatory class for one, two, or at the most, three months, according to their needs, after which they could enter the junior class for the remainder of the year. The examination of candidates last July plainly showed that the work of the preparatory schools is not of such a nature as to preclude the necessity of having a special preparatory class, such as your committee would respectfully recommend.

In this connection, attention may be called to the effect produced upon the classes of 1874 by the discontinuation of examinations for admission to the Girls' High School; the class then received without examination proved to have been ill prepared; and the number of pupils falling off during and at the close of the year was unusually large. These facts show conclusively that the School Board did wisely in ordering the examinations to be re-established.

As the extension of the regular course of instruction over four years, at the expiration of which graduates would be entitled to their first diploma, now conferred at the end of the third year's course of studies, is a measure which, if taken, would, as all agree, have a very positive effect upon the school, it has found equally warm advocates and opponents. The first consist of those who wish to see every possible encouragement given to the pursuance of higher courses of study, in order to raise the Girls' High School to the position of a quasi-collegiate institution. The opponents of the measure believe that a very great decrease in the number of pupils would be certain to result if the school course was lengthened by yet another year, and are of opinion that the doors of the Girls' High School should not be closed to those whose parents are unable to keep them at school for more than three years, and who, in many cases, make considerable sacrifices, in order that their daughters may then obtain a diploma.

The question then resolves itself into one of quality as against quantity, — would it be better to have the school so organized that those who graduate from it, though comparatively few in number, should carry with them the advantages of a really superior training; or keep it as it is, a High School like other High Schools for those who remain in it during three years, with the voluntary advantage to be obtained by those who are able to prolong and perfect their studies in the advanced classes, and thus obtain a second diploma? However the question may be decided by the reorganized School Board, this is the ground on which the decision will be made, namely, whether it is better to place the Girls' High School on an exceptionally high plane, without reference to the number of pupils who attend it; or whether only an average rate of attainment should be aimed at, calculated to meet the wants of the many who have not time or means to bestow upon higher culture. There can be no question, as to the beneficial action of the advanced classes, as at present organized, and their improved condition, both as to organization and opportunities offered, is highly creditable to the present head-master, who has in so many ways proved his exceptional capacity for his post, and his wise devotion to the best interests of the school.

If the girls who enter them intend to become teachers, they gain an invaluable opportunity for training in the difficult art which they desire to master. Brought face to face with the working problems of their future profession, they are taught to solve them, as they could not be by any possible amount of theoretical discipline. "It is only by working in the smithy," says a French proverb, "that one can become a smith." While they are thus useful as a nursery for teachers, the advanced classes are also eminently serviceable to the master in conducting the school, as they furnish him with substitutes qualified to take the place of regular teachers who are prevented by illness or other causes from carrying on their work. The benefits derived from the advanced classes are four in number: first, the benefit to the individuals who are trained in them to higher knowledge; second, to the community, as these scholars are there made more valuable members of society; third, to the schools where they exist, as from them substitutes may be taken when emergencies arise; and, fourth, to the schools in general, as they furnish them with suitable and reliable candidates to fill existing vacancies. Last year the number of diploma scholars who returned to continue their studies in the advanced classes was greater than in any previous year; this year it has still further increased. This is a matter for congratulation, as it shows that the advantages which they offer are appreciated.

Your committee is able to report that in two respects the school has never before been placed in so satisfactory a condition, namely, as regards opportunities for instruction in Drawing, and Physical Culture. In regard to the first, it has long been felt that the Girls' High School, where an advanced standard of culture is generally aimed at, should give its pupils a more especially artistic training than is possible, or even desirable, in schools of a lower grade. The key-note of what was needed in Art Education at this school was struck by the ladies and gentlemen who, at the instigation of the Social Science Association, gave a considerable number of casts to adorn the great Exhibition Hall. The frieze of the Parthenon and the casts of famous statues and busts which are there happily combined with the architectural features of the hall, so as to give it an effect of unity in itself delightful, though rarely ever attempted in the decoration of such rooms amongst us, were not placed in it solely for the purpose of making the hall an æsthetic centre to the school, but also that they might be used as models by those pupils who were sufficiently advanced to draw from casts.

This they will now do, and doubtless with more successful results than could have been looked for hitherto, on account of the increased opportunities for preparatory study offered in the new rooms for Drawing lately fitted up in the upper story of the building, under the superintendence of a highly qualified teacher. The special programme of study includes drawing from flat copies, casts, and solid models, as well as the study of historical ornament, and of plant forms and their application to design. The pupils are taught to use pencil, crayon, the stump, charcoal and water colors, and through lectures upon the history, theory, and practice of art illustrated from the black-board, and by the models hung round the room, are as far as possible enlightened not only as to artistic processes, but also as to the principles which lie at the base of all sound art. The more the room in which they carry on their work is enriched with good models, such as photographs from the drawings and paintings of the great masters, reproductions of antique and mediæval works, etc., etc., as well as by constantly renewed gifts of choice plants and flowers, the more may we hope to see high results obtained. To cultivate the perceptive faculties, to develop the taste, and enlighten the judgment, so that it may distinguish between what is good and what is bad, as it were instinctively; to awaken the love for beauty in nature and art where it lies dormant, and foster it where it is partially aroused, — these are duties which, if rightly apprehended and fulfilled, will go far towards making the Girls' High School a perpetual source of benefit and of legitimate pride to the community.

While æsthetic cultivation has thus been cared for, physical development has not been neglected. The teacher who has lately been appointed to take charge of the department of Physical Culture in the school is believed to be thoroughly competent for the task. The habits of the girls, as to food, clothing and occupation, are specially watched, and the sound sanitary principles inculcated will, it is to be hoped, radiate from the school to the home. As the room formerly appropriated to Drawing is now used as a physical laboratory, which has long been needed, the school possesses three laboratories, physical, chemical and botanical, each of which is the source of the best sort of scientific training to be reasonably looked for in a High School. To make the building thoroughly healthy a better system of ventilation is desirable, and this would be practicable at a moderate cost; but no further changes or expenditures of any magnitude are at present likely to be required in order to make the school equal to its duty.

In conclusion, your committee, while refraining from the expression of an opinion as to the wisdom of extending the regular course of instruction over four years, since they are not unanimous in its favor, respectfully recommend the adoption of the second order appended to the last report, here reprinted in a slightly altered form: —

Ordered, That the Committee on the Girls' High School be authorized to organize a preparatory class, into which candidates for admission who are unable pass all their examinations, but who give evidence of being generally fitted for the school, may be temporarily received.

For the Committee,

CHARLES C. PERKINS,
Chairman.

ROXBURY HIGH SCHOOL.

The Committee on the Roxbury High School take much pleasure in reporting another year of uninterrupted prosperity for the school. The last report left the school in the old Washington School building, of course much cramped, and in all ways tending to interfere with its proper work. About the middle of November, 1874, the school came back to its own building, which, much improved and enlarged, and in every way rendered better fitted for the needs of the school, has rendered the accomplishment of the ordinary work of the school more satisfactory to the teachers and to the committee. The building, by no means perfect, affords increased accommodations, the need of which has been felt for a long time.

The teachers, both regular and special, have, during the year, as in previous years, performed their work well; they have endeavored to raise the school to the high standard which at the present day it is felt a High School should reach and maintain, and the result of their efforts has been such, that the committee can feel justified in saying that they can give the school into the hands of the new Board of Education, in condition and prospects not exceeded by any High School in the city, and that those scholars who go forth from it take as high a rank as, if not higher than, those of any other school of like nature.

The plan of abolishing the admission of scholars simply on their presenting diplomas from a Grammar School has been a wise one. When the Grammar Schools shall bring up their standard so as to conform with the standard required by the High Schools, and a final examination at the Grammar School be of that character which shall be equivalent to the requirements of the High School, then it will be safe to drop the examination for entering the High Schools, and substitute the closing examination at the Grammar School in its place; but the result of last year's experiment proved that many Grammar School graduates were not qualified for the High Schools, and hence were obliged to leave soon after the opening of the school-year. The standard of the High School must not be too high, nor that of the Grammar School too low; but the latter must be enabled to lead to the former.

The questions prepared for admission to High Schools, by the committee for that purpose this year, were of a most excellent character; but it would be the better plan for such questions to have their value fixed by the committee, and not to leave it to the diverse judgment of different teachers to determine exactly what each question shall count in per cent. to the candidates for admission; then one standard would prevail throughout the city.

A chemical laboratory has been established in the basement, by the liberality of the city government, through the efforts of the late Dr. Allen. It has been fitted up in such a manner that some thirty pupils can be accommodated at one time at the desks. This department is at present under the charge of one of the regular teachers. The committee trust that there will be appointed soon a special teacher, who shall be enabled to devote her whole time to this important branch of knowledge.

Military Drill, which has become an important element of education in our High Schools, has been well sustained. The male pupils connected with this school have, during the year, entered into this with most praiseworthy zeal and earnestness, and show in their proficiency the results of the careful training of Col. Moore.

The school as now organized consists of a master, one master's head-assistant, one head-assistant, five assistants, a teacher of French, one each of German, Drawing, Music, Military Drill, and of Vocal Culture.

The committee have deeply felt the loss by death of their associate, Dr. Ira Allen, who, at the time of his death was chairman of this committee. Dr. Allen was ever a faithful and earnest advocate and friend of this school, and it was ever his aim to advance its welfare by word and action; his death came suddenly in the midst of his ever busy, active life, but it was given him to know, before his departure, that many of the much-needed improvements for the school for which he labored so earnestly during his life had been accomplished. His death has left a vacancy in the hearts of the teachers and scholars, and in those who were associated with him in his work, which it will ever be hard to fill; his memory shall indeed ever be kept green; his life shall be as a great example to many.

The committee, in closing this their last report as a local committee, do so, wishing the school every success in the future, and trusting that those who shall have charge of it will ever seek to maintain its present high standard of excellence and usefulness; and both committee and parents will feel that our city affords no better advantages than can be found at the Roxbury High School.

EDWARD G. MORSE,
Chairman.

DORCHESTER HIGH SCHOOL.

The Dorchester High School continues to be in its usual good condition, and there has been nothing in its history during the past year that calls for especial mention. Everything in the relations of the teachers with each other and with the scholars has been harmonious, and the machinery has worked without any appearance of friction. As the most uneventful history of any people is that of their peace and prosperity, so the school that requires the least discussion of its record may be supposed to be in the best condition. Certainly there have been no vexed questions in relation to this school to be settled, and the committee have had no special work to do in connection with it; and for this reason their duty has been uniformly pleasant and agreeable.

The regular instructors of the school have been devoted to their work, and have faithfully discharged the duties of their several positions; not a complaint of any kind has been made to the committee by a parent or other person. The head-master is as enthusiastic as ever in carrying out the purposes of the school; and the committee believe that the subordinate teachers, without an exception, are peculiarly fitted by education and natural ability for the situations they fill. The greatest care has been exercised in the selection of suitable persons for these places, and at no time in the history of the school has it been better provided for in this respect. More than upon all other conditions combined does a school depend upon good teachers. Elegant, comfortable and convenient school-houses, the best selected text-books, an extensive and varied collection of books of reference, the fullest cabinets of apparatus, are valuable, and they contribute largely to the prosperity of a High School; but not any or all of them can make a good school without skilful and devoted teachers. Their selection is by far the most important duty the School Committee are called upon to perform; and if they fail in this, all else they can do is of little avail.

The Dorchester High School is provided with an elegant and convenient edifice; it has been furnished by the city, at great expense, with a fine laboratory and abundant apparatus; and from the Gibson Fund —available only for the use of the schools of Dorchester— it has been supplied with many additional means of rendering the business of education attractive and efficient. All these appliances would be unavailing in the hands of inefficient teachers; and the people who use this school are to be congratulated upon the fact that the instructors are of the highest order, and are fully capable of using to the best advantage the abundant facilities of the school.

But, good as the school is believed to be, it would be absurd to claim or to suppose it is all a school should be. We have not yet reached the age of perfection in educational institutions any more than in other human spheres. The "speech of people" and the tone of the press seem to indicate a general belief that in all the schools, too much is attempted, and too little is accomplished. Even a glance at the "programme" of the Grammar Schools would convince any reasonable person that the charge is without foundation so far as this class of schools is concerned. The "three r's," with geography, grammar and history, are really all the studies regularly taught. Natural philosophy and physiology, to a very limited extent, are taught in oral lessons; and music and drawing not exceeding an hour and a half a week. Those who are the most familiar with the course of study in the Grammar Schools do not believe that too much is attempted; and those who understand the subject best are entirely satisfied that no radical changes are needed in this respect.

If the complaint has any force at all, it is in regard to the High Schools; and doubtless the Dorchester High School is as open to the objection as the other schools of its class. Some of our best educators believe the charge in relation to all the High Schools is well founded. Public sentiment in educational matters undergoes frequent changes; now requiring a little in many branches, and then a great deal in a few studies. Additional studies have been introduced, year after year, till the burden is greater than the average pupil can bear. The reorganized School Committee of Boston will give early attention to this subject, and for all the evils of this kind a remedy will be found; and the situation is by no means hopeless. It is expected that a uniform course of study for all the High Schools of the same character will be adopted by the new Board, and the whole matter will receive the most deliberate consideration.

At the close of the school-year the Committee of the Dorchester High School concluded that a change in the teacher of French was desirable, and they selected from a considerable list of applicants for the position Mr. Henri Moran, who entered upon his duties in September. His gentlemanly and attractive manners, his command of the English language, and his willingness and tact in conforming to the needs of his difficult position, have shown that the selection was an admirable one. Mr. Stein still retains his place as teacher of German, and continues to be as popular as ever both with teachers and scholars. It is often very difficult for foreigners to adapt themselves to the wants of our schools; but both of these gentlemen have fully met every reasonable expectation, and in no instance has any difficulty grown out of their relations with those with whom they come in contact, in giving their special lessons.

When, in 1870, by the annexation of Dorchester to the city of Boston, the schools of the town came under the care of the School Committee of the city, the Dorchester High was placed in charge of a special committee, the chairman then and now being the only member who has retained his continuous connection with the school from that time. In the newly organized Board no special committee has been assigned to each High School, as before, and the intimate relation of the Standing Committee, or any member thereof, closes with the present municipal year. Though the closing of any official term of service suggests a review of the past, it is hardly advisable in the present instance, any farther than to say that the period covered has been one of progress to the school, and of pleasure and satisfaction to the committee. The school has been warmly encouraged and faithfully sustained by the people for whose use it has been maintained; and in closing this last special report, on the school, it is proper to acknowledge its obligations to the past graduates of the school, and to the citizens of Dorchester generally, for the interest they have always manifested in its welfare. During this period the school has been placed under special obligations to Mr. James T. Fields, for his lecture on Tennyson, delivered before the pupils and their friends in the hall of the school-house, in which all were interested, and by which all were instructed; to Miss Charlotte Cushman, who kindly gave a reading on an occasion which will be long remembered by scholars, teachers and friends who were present, and who are the more ready for the kind service the great artist rendered them on that day to drop a tear over the grave to which she was so recently committed; to Mr. Alfred E. Burbank, of Chicago, who gave his amusing entertainment to a large audience in the hall; and to Mr. Sol Smith Russell, who delighted the large company assembled at the last exhibition with a specimen of his art. To these and other friends who have served the school in any manner, the committee desire to express their gratitude.

For the Committtee of the Dorchester High School,

WILLIAM T. ADAMS,
Chairman.

CHARLESTOWN HIGH SCHOOL.

The Committee on the Charlestown High School respectfully submit their annual report: —

The whole number of scholars attending the school during the past year was two hundred and eighteen, — eighty-one boys and one hundred and thirty-seven girls. The average number was one hundred and ninety-eight, — seventy-nine boys and one hundred and nineteen girls. The average attendance was one hundred and ninety, or ninety-six per cent.

The regular teachers are a head-master, a master, a sub-master, and five female assistants ranking as first assistant, second assistant, and assistants.

There are also four special teachers, who give instruction each week as follows, viz.: one in French, six hours; one in Drawing, six hours; one in Music, two hours; and one in Military Drill, two hours.

It has been proposed to ask permission of the Board to employ a special teacher in German, which is not taught in the school; but no definite action has been taken thus far towards bringing the subject before them, as your committee are not certain that any time can be spared from the other studies to be devoted to this additional study.

On account of ill-health, Miss Susan M. Getchell, an earnest and faithful assistant teacher, was compelled, in January last, to resign her position. Public notice of the vacancy having been given, a large number of applications were received from ladies residing not only in Boston and its vicinity, but in distant parts of the country. Their letters of application, with accompanying testimonials and recommendations, having been carefully perused by the committee, a select number were requested to appear before the committee for examination. Most of these complied, and after a careful hearing of the claims of the several candidates, and a patient consideration of their respective merits, a smaller number were selected for ballot. The qualifications of these last named appeared so nearly equal, that the committee experienced considerable difficulty in making a selection of one person from their number. The choice finally fell upon Miss Phœbe A. Knight, who formerly taught in one of the Grammar Schools in this District, but who has more recently been engaged in teaching the higher branches at the West.

When the final decision was made, the committee regretted that only one vacancy existed, and the hope was expressed that those applicants who had acquitted themselves so satisfactorily upon examination, might soon obtain positions in the schools in Boston, or elsewhere, to which their qualifications as teachers seemed to entitle them.

On the first day of July last the public exercises of the graduating class were held in the beautiful and spacious hall of the school building, and, as usual on all previous occasions of a like character, there was present a large and appreciative audience, composed mainly of the relatives and intimate friends of the graduates, with members of the Board, and others interested in the welfare of the school. The programme was carried out in a very satisfactory manner; many of the compositions read by the girls showed careful study of the subjects treated of, and marked originality of style and thought.

The declamations by the boys were generally very creditable to themselves and to their instructors. The singing by all the school, under the direction of Prof. Eichberg, was a very pleasing feature of the exercises, and contributed much to the enjoyment of the occasion.

At the close of the exercises the chairman of the committee, with a few words of commendation, advice and encouragement, presented to the graduates their diplomas. Of these, twenty-one pupils — seventeen girls and four boys — had completed the English and Classical course of four years, and the remaining ten — six girls and four boys — the English and Commercial course of three years.

At the close of the school year, one hundred and four pupils from the Grammar Schools of the Charlestown District, and ten from other schools, having passed a satisfactory examination, received their diplomas. Of this number eighty-five entered the Charlestown High School, four the Latin, two the Girls' High, and one the English High.

At the meeting of the Board held in July last, upon the request of Mr. A. P. Gage, Master, and Miss Katherine Whitney, First Assistant in the High School, for an increase of their salaries, an order was offered by the chairman of your committee, fixing the same respectively at thirty-two hundred dollars, and fifteen hundred dollars.

The order was referred to the Committee on Salaries, who subsequently reported that it would be inexpedient to adopt the same, for the reason that, in consequence of the peculiar organization of the school as regards the teachers, and of the present decrease in numbers of the pupils, the average amount expended for salaries per pupil in this school is now as large as in the majority of the other schools of the same grade in this city; and that the proposed increase would render the aggregate of salaries, in proportion to the number of pupils, greater than that of the other schools referred to. The report was accepted, and the salaries were allowed to remain unchanged.

Your committee, while acquiescing reluctantly in this decision, would commend the subject to the Board for their further consideration, trusting that, upon careful reflection, they may find it not inconsistent with their ideas of economy and proper discharge of duty to grant the increase of salaries asked for. Thus they will show their appreciation of the valuable services of two faithful, efficient, and accomplished teachers, and will do no more than a simple act of justice to their merits.

On account of business engagements, which are usually more pressing in the hours in which the school is in session, your committee have been unable, during the past year, to make the regular official examinations, which are required by the rules of the Board to be made quarterly.

Individual members of the committee, however, have made frequent informal visits to the school, when, by being present at recitations and other exercises, they have made themselves acquainted with the methods of instruction adopted by the teachers, and the effect of those methods upon the pupils.

They have also taken the opportunity to consult with the teachers on matters of interest to the school, and have given advice and encouragement whenever necessary. The general conduct and demeanor of the pupils have also been carefully observed during recitation, in the study hours, and sometimes in the play-ground; in fact they have beheld the school in its ordinary working dress, while the teachers and scholars were pursuing their usual daily routine of duty.

By such visits we think your committee have had as favorable opportunities for arriving at a proper knowledge of the true condition of the school as could have been obtained by more formal and stated visits, or by the regular examinations for which special preparation may have been made.

In concluding this, their last annual report to the Board under its present organization, your committee do not hesitate to state, without reservation, that the Charlestown High School, in their opinion, during the past year has maintained its high rank among the schools of the same grade in this city, and that its condition at this time is excellent.

All the teachers, both regular and special, in their respective spheres of duty, appear to be faithful, earnest and competent, and are generally successful in their efforts to impart sound and useful instruction, to those entrusted to their charge, and to improve their manners and morals; and their pupils, with some few exceptions, we doubt not, are making as good and sure progress and improvement in their studies as can reasonably be expected of them.

For the Committee,

GEO. B. NEAL,

Chairman.

WEST ROXBURY HIGH SCHOOL.

In the absence of the chairman of this committee, Rev. Mr. Mills, the duty of making out a report devolves on the undersigned, as temporary chairman.

In performing this duty, we shall draw largely from the report of the master of the school, Mr. Howe.

The number of pupils is about the same as at the last report. The number of regular teachers is the same.

Two influences have operated to prevent any large increase in numbers: 1st. The school established by the trustees of the Eliot fund. 2d. A desire on the part of some of the Grammar School graduates to attend the large central High Schools in the city proper.

At the close of the last term sixteen were graduated — four boys and twelve girls; being twenty-one per cent. of the boys, and fifty-five per cent. of the girls, who entered four years previous.

The Committee on Military Drill have extended their "Arms" to the school, and with the weekly drill of Col. Moore the boys are developing a creditable proficiency.

The amount of work performed in the regular studies of the course has been quite as much as usual, but the time devoted to Drawing, Music, etc., has left less time for Arithmetic, Spelling, and kindred reviews.

Written reviews are employed with gratifying results.

Book-keeping has been taught by dictating practical business transactions, which have been copied, and entered in proper form upon paper, in the presence of the teacher.

The apparatus allows pretty full illustration of most subjects in the natural sciences, especially in Electricity.

The class in Astronomy is making commendable progress in this vast and important branch of knowledge, in which they are greatly aided by the use of the telescope.

The arrangement of studies allows the pupil, upon entering, to pursue either the Latin or English course. Of thirty-two just entered, one, only, expressed a preference for the English course. This we regard as of questionable wisdom, where pupils remain only one or two years.

During the past year, for the first time, native teachers of German and French have been employed, rendering to the regular teachers efficient aid, more especially in pronunciation.

The teacher of vocal culture has been very fortunate in his labors to improve the articulation and delivery of the scholars.

The past year has been pleasant and profitable, nothing occurring to mar, in the least, the friendly relations of the committee, teachers, pupils, and parents, and, under the able direction of Mr. Howe, we feel safe in saying that pupils can make as rapid and thorough progress as in any other of the High Schools, or, in other words, that the West Roxbury High School is equal to the best.

By the resignation of Mr. Frank E. Dimick, master, a vacancy occurred, which has been filled by the nomination of Mr. H. W. Warren as head-assistant under the new rule. Mr. Warren is no stranger to the schools of Ward 17, having occupied before, and to the entire satisfaction of the committee, the same position to which he is now nominated. He has also acted as principal of the Central Grammar School, and his appointment to this school gives universal satisfaction to the community.

For the Committee,

J. E. BLAKEMORE,

Temporary Chairman.

BRIGHTON HIGH SCHOOL.

This school was established by vote of the town of Brighton in 1842, under the permissive authority of Section 2, Chapter 38, of the General Statutes of the Commonwealth. The population of the town, at that time, was (1,435) fourteen hundred and thirty-five; not sufficiently large it will be seen to compel the establishment of any High School. But such was the interest in educational matters shown by the citizens that they volutarily maintained a High School, in which, in addition to the studies required to be taught in High Schools in towns of five hundred families, instruction was also given in the "Greek, Latin and French languages, Astronomy, Geology, Rhetoric, Intellectual and Moral Science, and Political Economy;" and this for more than fifteen years before the town contained the number of inhabitants (four thousand or more) when, by the terms of the statute, it was required to keep and maintain such a school.

For the first two years it was conducted as two schools, designated respectively the High School for Girls and the High School for Boys. Since that time it has been, as at present, a High School for both sexes.

It was during the existence of the town of Brighton liberally and generously provided for by the citizens in the annual appropriation for school purposes; and under the several masters — notably while under charge of Mr. John Ruggles, the first master, who for a much longer period than any other had charge of the school — always maintained a high reputation for thoroughness of instruction, and compared most favorably in every respect with the High Schools of the neighboring cities and towns.

As this school had been in successful operation for more than thirty years prior to the annexation of the town of Brighton to the city of Boston it may perhaps be taken for granted that it was not established with a view to that event, and it is hoped that so long as there may be need of High School instruction for the youth of this section of the city, it may be afforded as at present within easy access.

Your committee believe that the supposed advantages to be derived from the establishment of one Central High School for boys, and another for girls, will not in any degree compensate for the inconvenience and danger to scholars, and for the additional expense to parents; and that to discontinue the local High Schools would, in this portion of the city at least, practically exclude the children of parents of small means from the benefits of a High School education.

The school has ample accommodation for one hundred pupils or more, and if the increase in the number of scholars in the Brighton School District, from which the school is supplied, be taken as a basis, it cannot be long before the membership will be equal to the accommodations.

The building is situated in a healthy and retired place, and is conveniently arranged, the lower floor being used for instruction in Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, and Philosophy; the second floor embracing the main school-room, with two recitation-rooms adjoining; while the third floor is a large hall, suitable for exhibitions, and at present used for a drill-room.

The corps of teachers consists of a head-master, one head-assistant, and one assistant, with special instructors in French, Drawing, Vocal Culture, and Military Drill; and opportunity is afforded for as complete instruction in the branches taught as in any High School in the city.

The following are the statistics of the school: —

	Boys.	Girls.
Number belonging to school Sept. 1, 1875	34	26
Average attendance for year ending Sept. 1, 1875	27	32
Admitted during year ending Sept., 1875, from Brighton School District (embracing Bennett and Harvard Grammar Schools)	16	8
From other schools	1
Number in graduating class, 1875 . .	5	9

Your committee, during the past year, from the quarterly examinations and other visits to the school, find, in the studies pursued, its condition satisfactory.

Your committee regret, that for some years prior to their term of service the attention to classical studies, for which the school had been previously distinguished, and which had furnished many students to our leading colleges, had for some cause not been maintained; and it is to be hoped that, in the future, the classical branches of the High School course may receive that attention which, in the opinion of your committee, they merit.

For the Committee,

JAMES H. RICE,

Chairman.

ON

REPORT ON DRAWING.

In view of the approaching reorganization of the School Board, and consequent changes in all standing committees, the Drawing Committee desires that the report now respectfully submitted, may be found to show that such substantial progress has already been made under the present system in the branch of education committed to its charge, as to encourage those who may hereafter direct it, to persevere in the same course, with confidence in its fitness to accomplish the aim which the city has in view, namely, the training of the children at the Public Schools in Drawing and Design.

This training of young eyes to see correctly, and of young hands to reproduce or combine forms simple and complex; this teaching of a new language, the silent and eloquent language of form, is begun in the Primary Schools, conducted on a higher plane in the Grammar Schools, and carried as far as possible in the High Schools, where efforts should be more and more directed towards awakening a love for the beautiful in nature and art in the minds of the pupils.

As this end is more and more plainly attained, we are convinced that the public will be more and more disposed to regard the course pursued by the Drawing

Committee with a favor, which, in its present incomplete workings, it cannot be expected to meet with on all hands. The persons who shake their heads dubiously are those amongst us who regard purely Mechanical Drawing "as unworthy of State interference;" who think that Industrial Drawing should, from the first, have in it a pronounced artistic element, and who regard any system as unsatisfactory which does not do what is here impossible, namely, surround children with beautiful forms of art, and lead them to appreciate their most subtle qualities. We are indeed of opinion that to grow up in an atmosphere permeated with beauty would be immeasurably advantageous to the rising generation. It would make our future citizens like those of Plato's republic, — men and women who, from loving beauty as a principle, for itself, would rise to an appreciation of divine beauty, and thus, guarded against all low tastes and desires, would reach an ideal status. Unfortunately, under the conditions imposed upon us, such high possibilities can only be aimed at in a very limited degree. In its present efforts the Drawing Committee must perforce confine itself to the task of laying the bricks and foundation stones of education in art; it has not the means to purchase such desirable reproductions of standard examples of plastics form and ornament as are necessary to illustrate the higher principles of art; it must work with dull tools and scant materials, hoping only that what is done, however little, may serve to prepare the way for better and higher things in the future. By and by, when the Museum of Fine Arts shall offer the teacher a place where he can illustrate principles of form and color to his pupils through artistic masterpieces, the then existing Drawing Committee will be placed on a vantage ground whence it can direct Public Education in the arts of design, on a scale, and with a success, impossible under present conditions. Something more, were the means provided, could be done at present, by enriching the High Schools and Evening Drawing Schools with good examples of form and color. Four bare walls and reams of paper, with pencils and rubber ad libitum, are not all that is needed. The teacher must have other appliances if he is to teach effectively. He needs hot-house flowers when the fields have ceased to produce wild flowers, that he may talk about plant forms intelligibly, and show their proper application in industrial design. To purchase these, as well as casts, flat copies, and models of all sorts, a sum of money might well be spent annually by the city, and at the same time contributions be solicited for the same purpose from all who are interested in Art Education.

Every High School ought to have a large, well-lighted room, appropriated to Drawing, fitted with proper desks, and supplied with such examples as are mentioned above. It should contain a few casts of the finest Greek statues and bas-reliefs, as well as of ornamental work of the best periods; also casts from nature, of heads, hands, feet and limbs, together with others of architectural fragments and metal work. Of flat copies it should have a selection from such works as M. Ravaisson's "Studies from the Antique," Gérome's "Cours de Dessin," Liévre's "Cours d'Ornement," etc., etc. With these materials, the instructors could effectively carry out the intention of the city in providing them, namely, to make them serve to develop the unquestionable faculty for design existing in our people, — a matter of vital importance to our manufacturing community. The duty of doing so has been recognized by the State and city, but as yet the means provided are not adequate.

The adoption of a sound system of progressive instruction is a great step towards it, but if the principles laid down in the text-books are to bear fruit, a great deal must be done in the way pointed out above. The only one of our High Schools which has as yet been put into anything like a favorable condition for the purpose is the Girls' High School, where the frieze of the Parthenon given by Mr. James M. Barnard, and the casts of antique statues and busts given by many private individuals to adorn the exhibition room, are available for study.

A room specially arranged for Drawing has lately been opened in the upper story of the building, under the charge of a highly qualified teacher; and a programme of studies, embracing plant form, historical ornament, and cast drawing in charcoal and crayon, has been prepared for the upper classes. All this will soon enable the public to judge of the superior results obtainable in a school properly equipped. We cannot doubt that these will be such as to convince every one of the necessity of putting all the High Schools in the same favorable condition.

Then will come the turn of the Grammar Schools, whose raised condition will push the High Schools up to a still higher level. Thus in course of time we shall see graduates from the High Schools, who, having commenced their education in the Kindergarten or the Primary School, have advanced to a really high state of attainment.

With such a prospect in view, we can afford to bear the doubts and cavils of those who would crown the edifice before they have laid the foundations, content to see proof, in each successive exhibition, that we have taken a wiser course in gradually adjusting a systematic course of instruction to the schools, and in planning and advising each successive step; meanwhile never losing sight of the goal, however distant it may now appear to be.

Is it not something which the city may be proud of, that, at the examination in the spring, eighteen head-masters obtained a full diploma; that in twenty-three Grammar Schools, whose head-masters did not obtain the full diploma, it was obtained by the head-assistant, or a teacher above that grade; and that over a thousand teachers from the schools passed examination in at least one subject? In consequence of this, in all but nine schools we now have some one qualified to give instruction in the five subjects of free-hand, model and memory Drawing, as well as in Geometry and Perspective, without the assistance of any special instructor, unless in exceptional cases.

Four years ago not a master or a teacher in any one of the schools could have taught more than one of the subjects above named. Instruction could only be given by special instructors, who, had any such general scheme of instruction as is now possible been attempted, would have had to be multiplied to such an extent as to render the teaching of Drawing in the public schools impracticable on account of the expense. Now we have forty-one schools where instruction can and will be given without one dollar's additional cost to the city.

The aggregate expense attending the instruction of Drawing during the past year, 1874-1875, exclusive of drawing-books, was $30,187.34, being $1,648.18 less than the previous year, of which sum $21,608.67 was paid for salaries. The salaries of the teachers of Drawing in six evening schools amounted to $8,730. The cost of material for the day and evening schools, fitting up new school, etc., was $8,578.67; of the amount expended in the evening schools $472.81 was returned to the city treasury for pencils, paper, rubber, etc., purchased by the pupils.

In regard to these evening classes, your committee desire to state, that they hope by a more systematic organization to increase their usefulness. Here the problem to be solved is different from that offered in the day schools. Instead of entering upon a course of study which is to extend over several years, the pupils attend in many instances but for a single season, and not always regularly, dropping off generally in the spring, when mechanics find work at a distance from home; and, even if they remain in the neighborhood, cease to attend, because the lengthened days allow them to continue their work until too late an hour. For these reasons, the Drawing Committee recommended that these schools should be opened in October instead of November, and be closed in April instead of May. The class of persons who frequent them desire instruction in instrumental drawing, building construction, ship-draughting, free-hand and cast drawing. In order that it may be effective, they need many more models and flat copies than they have at present.

Perceiving this need, the Drawing Committee appealed last autumn to the public, asking for gifts and loans. This appeal met with but a limited response. Valuable contributions were made by the Trustees of the Mechanics' Charitable Association, by Messrs. Blake & Co., and by some private individuals, and to them we offer our grateful acknowledgments at the same time that we express the hope that others will follow their generous example. Having no annual allowance, to be spent upon models, these schools are dependent on public charity for everything but the localities in which they are held, and such materials for work as paper, boards, pencils, etc., etc. We are convinced that to make this fact known will suffice, and that the Appleton-street school will not long continue to be the only one which is at all adequately supplied.

In behalf of the Committee,

CHARLES C. PERKINS, Chairman.

INSTRUCTION IN SEWING

IN THE

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

1874 and 1875.

REPORT.

In School Committee, Dec. 22, 1874.

The committee appointed to consider the interests of instruction in Sewing in the Public Schools beg leave to report, —

1. That they have sent to all the masters of the Grammar Schools containing girls a circular embracing the following questions: —

1. Please inform me to what extent Sewing is taught in the school under your charge. Number of classes, etc.

2. How much time per week during the past year was apportioned to instruction in Sewing in each class?

3. Were the lessons given by the teacher with the accustomed regularity of other school studies?

4. What is the plan of instruction pursued?

5. What seems to be the effect upon the school, of the instruction in Sewing, as affecting other studies?

6. The committee would be glad to receive any suggestions that may occur to you in regard to Sewing in the Public Schools.

In answer to these inquiries the committee have found that in nearly all the Grammar Schools attended by girls, —

1. Provision has been made for education in sewing, within the limits of existing rules; i.e., in the fourth, fifth and sixth classes, to the extent of six divisions.

2. That in a few of these schools, by special permission of the School Board, this instruction is carried beyond the prescribed limit, and in one school — the Winthrop — it is extended to every class.

Of the twenty-three teachers whose testimony has been received, fifteen put a high value upon this branch of school instruction and would favor its extension; four are decidedly opposed to it; and four express no opinion.

Your committee have also held a conference with the sewing teachers. A variety of opinions was found to exist among them, in regard to the possibility of combining instruction in cutting and fitting with the present teaching, and extending this instruction through the entire Grammar-school course.

The most competent teachers believe this to be possible, provided the masters and local committees were favorable to it.

This opinion was confirmed by the result of the experiments as tried in the Winthrop School. Indeed, every objection which has been made from any quarter, to extending this branch of study to all the classes of these schools, can be met and satisfactorily answered by the same authority.

In view of these facts, viz.: —

1. The favor with which the plan would be received by the great majority of the masters;

2. The readiness of the sewing teachers, under encouragement from their superiors, to enter upon the work;

3. The entire success of the plan in the only school in which it has been tried;

4. The great practical value of such instruction and its necessity in the schools, in view of the incapacity of homes to provide such teaching;

Your committee unanimously recommend, —

1. That Chap. I., Section 2, of the Rules and Regulations be amended by inserting the words "on Sewing" after the words "on Drawing."

2. That Chap. IV. be amended by inserting a new section to read as follows: —

"The Committee on Sewing shall exercise a general supervision in all the schools where Sewing shall be introduced, over that department of instruction; they shall appoint and nominate to the Board, for confirmation, teachers of Sewing in the schools; they shall examine the pupils in this branch, and shall report to the Board in writing at the meetings in March and September."

3. That Chap. XIII., Section 12, be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor: —

"Instruction in sewing and the cutting and making of garments shall be given in all the Grammar Schools containing girls, and in all the classes of those schools. The teacher of sewing shall give to each pupil in the fourth, fifth and sixth classes two lessons a week, of not less than one hour each, on different days or sessions of the school, and in other classes one lesson a week, of the same length."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

IN SCHOOL COMMITTEE, Jan. 5, 1875.

The Committee on Rules and Regulations and the Committee on Salaries, jointly, to whom were referred (Dec. 22d) three orders reported by the Committee on Sewing, have given careful consideration to these orders, have listened to the testimony of masters of Grammar-school districts, who desire the adoption of these orders, and of other masters who disapprove them.

The committee are convinced that the moment has come when the experiment of enlarging and extending the duties of the sewing teachers should be made. As to the exact details of the plan, some further deliberation is needed. To this end, they recommend the adoption by the Board of the first two orders named, with slight verbal amendments, and that the consideration of the third order be in due time entrusted to the committee organized in conformity with these orders.

They therefore propose that Order Three be recommended to the new School Board for consideration.

Orders One and Two are herewith submitted: —

1. That Chapter I., Sect. 2, of the Rules and Regulations be amended by inserting the words "on Sewing," after the words "on Drawing."

2. That Chapter IV. be amended by inserting a new section, to read as follows: —

"The Committee on Sewing shall exercise a general supervision over that department of instruction, in all the schools where sewing shall be introduced; they shall nominate to the Board for confirmation teachers of sewing in the schools; they shall examine the pupils in this branch, and report to the Board in writing at the meetings in March and September."

IN SCHOOL COMMITTEE, Feb. 9, 1875.

The Committee on Rules and Regulations, in regard to the orders referred to them relating to sewing in the girls' schools, beg leave to submit the following report: —

There seems to be no doubt that the appointment of a Committee on Sewing would have a beneficial effect upon this branch of instruction in the schools.

Such a committee, by comparing results in the different schools, and by giving special attention to the needs of the female pupils in this direction, and communicating the conclusions to which they are led by their observation and thought, will be of great service to the Board as well as to the schools themselves. The passage of the first order is therefore recommended.

The second order, defining the duties of the Committee on Sewing, your committee propose to amend by striking out the clause giving said committee the authority to nominate the sewing teachers. As each sewing teacher gives instruction in only one school, and is, in fact, a part of the teaching force of that school, — instead of being connected with several schools, as are the music and the drawing teachers, — it seems advisable that she should be nominated by the particular committee having that school in charge, in consultation with the master of the school. The passage of the order, with this omission, is recommended.

In reference to the proposed extension of this branch of instruction in the girls' school, your committee are not fully in accord with the report made to the last Board by the special committee on this subject. It is a question whether the advantages that might be gained from the introduction of sewing into the higher classes would not be more than offset by losses in other directions. Your committee would, therefore, simply recommend its introduction into the third class, and giving to district committees authority to extend it into the higher classes of their respective schools, should circumstances render such an extension desirable.

The recommendations of your committee are embodied in orders appended to this report.

For the Committee,

JOHN KNEELAND,
Chairman.

Ordered, That Sect. 2, Chap. I., be amended by inserting, "On Sewing," after the word, "Drawing."

Ordered, That a new section be inserted in Chap. IV., after Section 11, to be called Section 12,— the numbers of the following sections to be changed accordingly, — as follows: —

SECT. 12. The Committee on Sewing shall exercise a general supervision over that department of instruction in all the schools where sewing shall be introduced; shall examine the pupils in that branch, and report to the Board at the regular meetings in March and September.

Ordered, That Sect. 12, Chap. XIII., be amended so as to read: —

SECT. 12. Instruction shall be given in sewing to the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth classes of girls in the Grammar Schools; and the several district committees may extend such instruction into the other classes of girls in their respective Grammar Schools, if they deem it advisable so to do. The district committee of each school in which such instruction is given shall nominate to the Board, for confirmation, some qualified person as teacher of sewing, who shall give to each of the four classes in which sewing is required, two lessons a week, of one hour each, on different days or sessions of the school; and shall give, also, such lessons to the other classes, not exceeding the above in length and frequency, as said committee may require.

Read, and accepted, and laid on the table, and ordered to be printed, together with the report of the special committee made Dec. 22d, 1874.

Secretary.

OPINION

CITY SOLICITOR.

MAY, 1875.

Legality of Employing Teachers of Sewing.

OPINION OF CITY SOLICITOR.

In School Committee, April 27, 1875.

Ordered, That the City Solicitor be requested to give his opinion as to the legal right of this Board to employ special teachers to teach the art of sewing in the public schools of the city.

Attest:

BARNARD CAPEN,
Secretary.

City Solicitor's Office,
2 Pemberton Square,
Boston, May 18, 1875.

Sir: — I have to say in reply to the question proposed to me by an order of the School Committee, adopted on the 27th ult., that in my opinion it is not competent for the Board to employ special teachers to teach the art of sewing in the public schools. If this might be done, instructors may be appointed to teach all branches of industry. A statute was passed in the year 1862 authorizing the teaching of agriculture by lectures, or otherwise, in the public schools in which the School Committee deem it expedient;

thus implying that legislative permission was necessary to its introduction.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
J. P. HEALY.

Hon. Samuel C. Cobb,
President of the School Committee.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

APPOINTED TO REPRESENT THE

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

BEFORE THE LEGISLATURE.

REPORT.

City Hall, May 3, 1875.

At a meeting of the School Committee, held April 27th, ult., the following order was passed: —

Ordered, That a committee of seven members be appointed to represent this Board before any Committee of the Legislature, having in charge the proposed amendment of the City Charter in regard to the government of the public schools.

The following committee was appointed in pursuance of this order: —

Messrs. Underwood, Fitzgerald, Reynolds, Flint, W. T. Adams, Neal and Washburn.

Attest:

BARNARD CAPEN,
Secretary.

The committee appointed to represent the School Committee before any Committee of the Legislature having in charge the proposed amendments of the City Charter, in regard to the government of the public schools, have considered the subject, and respectfully report the following bill as a substitute for that part of the bill relating to the School Committee, now in charge of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives: —

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

SECTION –. The qualified voters of the city of Boston, at the annual municipal election occurring in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, shall elect twenty-four persons, inhabitants of the city, to constitute the Board of Education; the eight persons who shall have received the largest numbers of votes shall hold the office for three years; the eight persons who shall have received the next largest number of votes shall hold the office for two years; and the eight persons who shall have received the next largest number of votes shall hold the office for one year. In case two or more persons elected shall have received an equal number of votes, those who are the seniors by age shall, for the division into classes hereby required, be classified as if they had received the larger number of votes in the order of ages. And thereafter the qualified voters shall annually elect eight persons, inhabitants of the city, to serve as members of the Board of Education for the term of three years.

SECT. –. The persons so chosen as members of the Board of Education shall meet and organize on the second Monday in January, at such time and place as the mayor may appoint. They shall elect a president, who shall, when present, preside at the meetings of the board, and a vice-president, who shall preside in the absence of the president. The unexpired term of office of all members of the School Committee shall terminate on the second Monday of January, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six.

SECT. –. Vacancies in the Board of Education shall be filled in the manner prescribed by law for filling vacancies in School Committees.

SECT. –. A majority of all the members of the Board of Education shall be necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. They shall choose a secretary, not of their own number, an auditing clerk, and such other subordinate officers as they may deem expedient, and shall define their duties, fix their compensation, and may remove them at pleasure.

SECT. –. The Board of Education shall have the supervision and direction of the public schools, and shall have the powers and perform the duties in relation to the care and management of schools which the selectmen of towns or school committees are now authorized or required by law to perform, except so far as they may be changed or modified by this act. They may elect teachers, and may discharge those now in office, as well as those hereafter elected. They shall appoint janitors for the school-houses, fix their compensation, designate their duties, and may discharge them at pleasure.

SECT. –. Whenever, in the judgment of the Board of Education, a new building or any addition to or alteration of a building is needed for school purposes, of an estimated cost of over one thousand dollars, they shall make a statement in writing to the City Council of the necessity of the proposed building, addition or alteration; and no contract for the purchase or lease of land, or for the erection, purchase or lease of any building, or for any addition to or alteration of any building for school purposes, shall be authorized by the City Council until such statement has been made, nor until the locality and plans for the same have been approved by the Board of Education, or by a sub-committee thereof, duly authorized to approve the same.

SECT. –. The Board of Education shall elect a Superintendent of Schools and a Board of Supervisors, consisting of not more than six members, and shall define their duties and fix their compensation. The Superintendent and the members of the Board of Supervisors shall hold office for the term of two years, unless sooner removed; and they may be removed for cause at any time by the Board of Education. No member of either branch of the City Council or of the Board of Education shall hold the office of Superintendent or Supervisor. The Superintendent shall be a member of the Board of Supervisors, and shall, when present, preside at their meetings.

SECT. –. The votes of a majority of the whole Board of Education shall be necessary to elect the Superintendent of Schools, the Supervisors, the Head Masters of the Latin, Normal and High Schools, the Masters of the Grammar Schools, or the Director of a special study or exercise.

Respectfully submitted,

ANNUAL SCHOOL FESTIVAL.

ANNUAL SCHOOL FESTIVAL.

The Annual School Festival was held in Music Hall, on the afternoon of Saturday, July 3d, under the direction of the following Special Committee, appointed for the purpose, viz., Messrs. William T. Adams, Henry P. Shattuck, Willard S. Allen, John W. Porter, Joseph O'Kane, Edward H. Dunn, George H. Marden, Richard J. Fennelly, Pelatiah R. Tripp.

Invitations were extended to the City Council and heads of departments, the School Committee, the teachers of the Public Schools, the medal scholars, and all the pupils of the High and Grammar Schools who received the graduating diploma at the recent annual exhibitions of the schools. State officials and distinguished citizens were also present.

The following description of the decoration of the hall and the exercises is copied from the "Boston Journal": —

"The exercises incident to the close of the public schools, which have been in progress during the past week, culminated on Saturday in the Annual Festival at Music Hall, which was participated in by the diploma scholars and their friends. In accordance with the usual custom, the work of the florist was everywhere visible, a handsome stage setting of tropical plants, evergreens and bright-hued flowers forming the most conspicuous feature of the decorations. The large chandeliers over the stage were completely hidden by their floral adornments. Two large wire screens, filled with bouquets, were placed one on either side of the statue of Beethoven, and formed a striking feature of the embellishments. The fronts of the galleries were festooned with evergreens, bouquets being suspended at intervals.

"The decorations were done by L. H. Foster and the bouquets were furnished by Dee & Doyle and Norton Brothers, and were superior to any flowers hitherto provided.

"The graduates of the several High Schools occupied seats on the floor, while the galleries were filled with the diploma scholars from the various Grammar Schools.

"Every seat not filled by the graduates was occupied by the fortunate holders of tickets. The schools were marshalled into their respective positions by Mr. L. M. Chase, Master of the Dudley Boys' School.

"The exercises commenced with music by the Germania Band. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Hamilton, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Temple street, after which an address of welcome was delivered by Mr. William T. Adams, Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, as follows: —

"'Graduates of the High and Grammar Schools: You have come here to-day at the invitation of the city of Boston, crowned with the laurels you have won on the scholastic field; and, by the grace of His Honor the Mayor, I am accorded the privilege of giving you the first word of welcome to this ancient and honored festival; of saying to each of these laurel-crowned victors, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" I give you the heartiest welcome the city of Boston can give to those who have faithfully discharged the duties required of them: such a welcome as she gave to her patriotic sons when they came home from the battles of the Republic; such a welcome, too, as she recently gave to those who "fought on the other side" when they came here to help us bury the hatchet of civil dissension under the shadow of that tall shaft on Bunker Hill.

"'I give you a Boston welcome, but I fear you must go to Virginia and South Carolina to learn the full measure of its meaning. If I could personify the old city we love to-day more than ever before, I should place before you a great motherly being, — and we feel that our city is very great, — with a heart so large, on an occasion like this, as to pervade the whole of her huge form, a heart big enough to take in even eighteen hundred of you, laurel wreaths and victor's crowns included. She spreads out her great arms, calling down a loving benediction upon your heads; and I can easily imagine the tear that dims her great eyes, as she murmurs in tones as solemn as the deepest notes of the great organ, but tremulous with emotion, "God bless you, my children! Be faithful in your great Future as you have been in your little Past! Like water, I have poured out upon you the riches of my treasure-houses; as a mother watches over the cradle of her first-born have I watched over you; but I know that all my treasure and all my care shall be a hundred-fold repaid in the intelligence and virtue of my people, and even in the material prosperity of my domain in the years that are to come! My hope for the future is in you. Be true to me by being true to yourselves."

"'I know of no city which celebrates just such an annual festival as this, and I think it is peculiarly a "Boston notion." Though we cannot, in this initiatory year of the centennials, look back to its origin a hundred years ago — for it needs about the years of one of these maidens from the High Schools to complete its century — it is still a venerable institution. When it was first celebrated the men who fought at Concord, Lexington and Bunker Hill were the active citizens of the time, reaping the first fruits of the independence they had battled and suffered to achieve. The Selectmen and the School Committee of the town of Boston met in those early days to honor the medal graduates of the public schools, and thereby to express their appreciation of the value of free public education.

"'I am old enough myself to remember this festival forty years ago, when the city authorities gave a grand dinner in Faneuil Hall to the recipients of the Franklin medal, and sherry and champagne alternated between every two plates on the festive board. The times have changed, happily changed, we shall all agree; but the school festival still exists; and, however changed in form, its object is the same as in the early years of the present century — to honor the graduates of the public schools, to magnify the value and importance of these institutions as the foundations and safeguards of a Republican government.

"'But, scholars, I do not forget that we have invited you here to rejoice and be glad while the city gives you the official recognition to which your earnest and successful efforts in the schools so richly entitle you; nor that, while I pat you on the head with the right hand, I am not to pinch and torment you with the left; in other words, that I am not to vex your spirit with a long speech. While as Bostonians we speak proudly to-day of our city, we do not forget that it is only a part, though a very considerable part, of the State of Massachusetts — Massachusetts the "mother of States" as truly as her elder sister in the family, though in a different sense, for her wealth has contributed to develop the vast resources of a score of States, to which her sons have carried our New England institutions. The State, as well as the city, has a greeting for you to-day, scholars, and it shall be given by one of her most distinguished citizens, who has honored the old Commonwealth in many exalted positions of trust, and whose eloquent voice is always ready when the State needs a defender, or true progress an advocate. I have the pleasure of presenting to you the Hon. Geo. B. Loring, the President of the Senate of Massachusetts.'

"Music by the band followed the address of Mr. Adams which was frequently applauded.

"Hon. George B. Loring was then introduced and addressed the audience.

"REMARKS OF DR. LORING.

"Dr. Loring referred in opening to the educational jubilee which had occupied the last few days in Massachusetts. The colleges and high schools and normal schools had held, by their commencements and anniversaries, the entire attention of an educated, admiring and interested community. Such a manifestation of devotion to one of the great pillars upon which the fathers founded the State is gratifying and encouraging. The progress of that classical culture which they loved, and for which they devoted a large share of their substance, has filled the public mind with such a love of knowledge that the very earth shines under its influences.

"It is the diffusion of this sentiment through all ranks and orders of men which characterizes our country. The foundation of a fraternity of scholars is a great thing for any country, but the establishment of a universal love of knowledge is the laying of the very corner-stone upon which all higher culture in a republic must rest. We turn, therefore, to our common-school system with confidence and hope. Within the walls of those institutions, which are founded and supported by the people for the popular good, may be cultivated those powers of the mind and those qualities of the heart which will make a people truly great.

"The school-house lies at the foundation, and, brought to its highest work, it becomes a nursery of honor and honesty, and a love of country based on gratitude for what the country bestows. From the schools of our State comes that intellectual vigor which gives safety to the Commonwealth; and in an age like this, with all its grave and important issues, it is specially necessary that the powers of the popular mind should be thoroughly developed. Dr. Loring drew a contrast between the modes of education today and that which our fathers enjoyed, and, in closing, congratulated the children on the opportunities which were so freely laid before them, for education designed to fit them for every walk in life.

"The duty of presenting bouquets to each of the graduates was cheerfully accepted by His Honor, Mayor Cobb, who addressed them as follows: —

"REMARKS OF MAYOR COBB.

"'My Young Friends: — I hope you have derived benefit and pleasure from what has been said to you by these gentlemen who have been so kind as to address you. And now comes my speech. It is a very short speech so far as words go, though it will take some time in the delivery. You well know there is what is called the language of flowers. Some of you possibly may have taken some lessons in it, and may understand it in part. I am not an adept in it myself. I shall, therefore, simply and silently address to each of you, individually, a little bunch of flowers, leaving it to you to read them. Only this I beg of you — that whatever other meanings you may find in them, you will not fail to see that they express the interest which I feel, and the whole city feels, in your improvement and welfare, and our heartiest good wishes for your health and happiness both at school and at home, in term-time and vacation, in study and in play, and throughout your whole lives.'

"Each of the speakers in turn were recipients of a bouquet presented by three young ladies from the Dorchester High School. The last to perform this pleasing task addressed His Honor the Mayor as follows: —

"'Mr. Mayor, — All the girls and boys of the public schools believe in you. Will you accept this bouquet from the graduates as their tribute of honor and respect?' (Applause.)

"This closed the exercise, and as the graduates received the floral tributes they retired to Bumstead Hall, where they partook of a collation.

"This was followed by dancing, in the midst of which Mr. Sol. Smith Russell appeared upon the scene and entertained the young people with his droll and inimitable humor.

"The floor was in charge of the officers of the School Battalion, who appeared in uniform and acquitted themselves in the most gallant manner."

DESCRIPTION AND DEDICATION

OF THE

LOWELL GRAMMAR SCHOOL-HOUSE.

LOWELL GRAMMAR SCHOOL-HOUSE.

DESCRIPTION.

This new Grammar School building, named in honor of the Lowell family, is located at the corner of Centre street and Houghton place, Ward 22, Boston Highlands, and from its conspicuous situation forms quite a prominent landmark for the surrounding country. Externally, the structure is irregular in outline, being well broken by buttressed projections, terminating in gables and pediments, with stone copings, the sky-lines of ridges and "peaks" being ornamented by gilded crestings and finials. The length, including projections, is about 134 feet, the width about 85 feet. It is three stories high, the façades constructed of pressed brick and Nova Scotia freestone dressings, the roof being steep-hipped, slated in colors, and surmounted by a symmetrical cupola of metal work.

Internally the principal features are spacious halls and corridors, ample staircases, and means of egress and ingress; high, abundantly lighted and well ventilated school-rooms, commodious wardrobes, waiting-rooms and play-rooms. Particular care has been given to the heating, lighting and ventilating, and with commendable results. The warming is the indirect steam method, the boiler-rooms in basement being fire proof. Extending from basement to "cock-loft" are two brick, ventilating shafts, 8 feet by 8 feet, into which are emptied the ventiducts from school-rooms, the hot air and smoke pipes introduced into these shafts creating a constant upward and outward current of vitiated air. The pure air, admitted into hot-air chambers or cells in basement, is warmed and then sent to the rooms, producing a uniform temperature throughout the building.

The first and second stories contain each six school-rooms, 28 by 31 feet, and 13 feet clear height, with required coat-rooms and teachers' rooms. The third story contains, besides two school rooms, an audience hall, capable of seating about 800, and finishing nearly 20 feet high. Beside school-rooms and audience hall there are two smaller rooms, one used as a library, and the other for a store-room for city books, etc. The office is on the second floor. The basement contains play-rooms for both departments, boiler and fuel-rooms, dressing-rooms, etc. Double sets of sashes are provided and hung for the windows, an extra precaution against cold, and permits fresh air to be admitted without exposing the children to currents of cold air. The finish is pine throughout, grained in light tint, the stairway finish being of hard wood, the vestibules and entrance halls paved in North-river stone, granite being used for steps and platforms. The yard-walls are of brick, with piers and moulded coping. The large yards are paved with brick. On the street sides of the lot are iron fences and posts, on granite bases, with gateways from Centre street and Houghton place.

Architect, J. Foster Ober; contractor for masonry, Augustus Lothrop; for the carpentry, B. H. Flanders; for the heating apparatus, G. W. Walker & Co. Cost: land, $20,750; building, $129,316.42. Total, $150,066.42.

DEDICATION.

The Lowell Grammar School-house was dedicated November 10, 1874. The large and beautiful hall was filled with the scholars, parents and friends, and the exercises were exceedingly interesting.

The chairman of the Lowell district committee, George M. Hobbs, Esq., presided. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. H. Plumb, after which an anthem was sung in a beautiful manner by a select choir of scholars, under the direction of Mr. L. W. Mason. Alderman Emery then stepped forward, and in brief and appropriate remarks presented the keys to His Honor the Mayor, who spoke as follows: —

ADDRESS OF MAYOR COBB.

Mr. Chairman: — I felicitate you upon the completion of this noble building, which adds another to the goodly number of commodious and costly Grammar School-houses erected by the liberality of the citizens of Boston. Surely, sir, the thanks of the people are due to the committee which you represent, as well as to your efficient superintendent, for the careful supervision and faithful attention to details, which mark the work on every hand.

The erection of this school-house, which the committee decided to be much needed, is an evidence of the rapid increase of population in this section of the city, which has been transformed within a very few years from a suburban retreat to a thickly-settled district.

Mr. Chairman of the District Committee, I now deliver to you the keys, and place the building in your charge. Having performed this official act, I desire, before I take my seat, to express my sense of the peculiar fitness of the name which has been given this school. The city, the state, the nation, owe much to the intelligence, the public spirit and the liberality of the Lowell family. The words used by Edward Everett in referring to the deserved honor which had been paid to the name in bestowing it upon a sister city may well be repeated on the occasion of dedicating the Lowell Grammar School-house, in the city which contains the Lowell Institute: "What memorial of a great public benefactor so becoming as the bestowal of his name on a prosperous community, which has started, as it were, from the soil at the touch of his wand? Pyramids and mausoleums may crumble to the earth, and brass and marble mingle with the dust they cover; but the pure and well-deserved renown, which is thus incorporated with the busy life of an intelligent people, will be remembered till the long lapse of ages, and the vicissitudes of fortune shall reduce all of America to oblivion and decay." You will agree with me, I am sure, that it is appropriate and desirable that the record of this day's proceedings should show something of the origin and significance of the name as applied to this building. Accordingly, at my request, a sketch has been prepared by one who, from his intimate relations with the Lowell family for a long period, is perhaps more competent to do it than any other person who could be called upon for that service; one, too, who has a good claim to be heard here to-day as having for many years, in times past, taken the leading part in the administration of school affairs in Roxbury. I refer to Rev. Dr. Putnam.

ADDRESS OF REV. DR. PUTNAM.

The name selected for this school is that of the family which, for near or quite a century, has been identified with the large estate that lies across the street, extending toward the north as far as the bridge, and running up to the left to a considerable distance on both sides of Heath street. This estate, which is now intersected with streets, and is being rapidly covered with dwellings, which will furnish a large portion of the pupils of this school, was until lately a beautiful country-seat, embracing park, gardens, farm lands and conservatories, and all the adornments befitting the residence of a family of wealth, taste and liberal culture.

Its first owner of the name was Judge John Lowell, who occupied it during the latter part of the last century. This gentleman, as may be learned from the numerous official and honorary titles affixed to his name in the college catalogue, was a man of high position and influence in this community. He was the first judge of the United States District Court for Massachusetts, appointed by Washington.

The John Lowell so well known to the elders of the present generation was the son of the judge, and his successor in the possession of the family homestead. He was a man of the highest mark in this community during the first third of the present century. Bred to the bar, he retired early in life from the profession in which he was winning the highest distinction, and desired ever after to be known only as "The Norfolk Farmer." A good naturalist himself for his time, he was the associate and correspondent of the most eminent naturalists in this country and in Europe. He, more than any other, was the originator of scientific agriculture in New England, and the founder of horticulture, as one of the liberal arts amongst us, both theoretical and experimental. He was the first amongst us to organize a greenhouse on an ample scale, and on scientific principles. In the mean time he took all knowledge for his province. In literature, in science, in politics, in theology, he was the peer of the foremost, and his plain, but hospitable mansion, beyond the rising ground opposite, was the head-quarters where all who were most advanced in knowledge and high accomplishments delighted to gather, and were welcomed for consultation and liberal devisings, and the interchange of wit and wisdom.

There are those still living amongst us who remember well this remarkable man. Small of stature, much below the middle height, he had a very large presence. He was a centre of attraction in any circle which he entered. By the urbanity of his address, the ardor of his temperament, the wisdom of his counsels, the eloquence of his speech, whether in public discourse or private conversation, by the spell of his genius and the wealth of his knowledge, as well as by the purity of his life, and the simplicity and elevation of his character, he charmed, and won, and commanded all with whom he came in contact.

Another son of Judge Lowell, Francis Cabot Lowell, was recognized in his time as having been chiefly instrumental in introducing the cotton manufacture into Massachusetts as a leading branch of industry. By his mathematical and inventive talent, as applied to the construction and improvement of machinery, and by his energy, courage and sagacity in business affairs, he organized at Waltham, in connection with Patrick T. Jackson, the first extensive and complete cotton-mill in this State, — a bolder and more difficult undertaking, at the time, than can now be easily conceived. Accordingly, when, soon after Mr. Lowell's death, which occurred in 1817, Mr. Jackson, together with Paul Moody and Nathan Appleton, projected our first great city of spindles, on the Merrimac, considering that it was Mr. Lowell's genius and successful efforts that had prepared the way for their gigantic enterprise, and made it feasible, they gave his name to the new municipality.

The third son of the judge was Dr. Charles Lowell, minister of the West Church in Boston, whose apostolic character and impressive eloquence are still fondly remembered by the elders in our churches.

In the next generation of this family, we find John Lowell, jr., who founded the Lowell Institute, with an ample endowment for the free instruction and entertainment of the people of Boston forever. Also John Amory Lowell, still living, who is trustee and sole manager of the Institute founded by his cousin, and who, if he were not eminent in business circles, as an expert and authority in relation to the financial, commercial and industrial interests of the country, would enjoy sufficient distinction as a student of classical literature, as an adept in the natural sciences, as the man who brought Agassiz over and planted him in America, as an efficient promoter of good knowledge, individually and in connection with learned societies, and as an occupant of a seat in the highest governing board of our university, as his father was, and his grandfather and his uncle before him.

To complete the trio of distinguished cousins in this generation as in the preceding, we have our well-known poet and all-accomplished Harvard professor, — James Russell Lowell, — who has just received the highest literary diploma from Oxford and Cambridge in England. No other American, I believe, has received this recognition from both these universities, and only four or five from either one of them.

Passing on to the next or fourth generation, we have John Lowell, the jurist, who now occupies with distinguished ability and success the same seat on the United States District Bench which his great-grandfather filled three-quarters of a century ago. Also, General Charles Russell Lowell and his brother, Lieutenant James Jackson Lowell, grandsons of Dr. Charles Lowell, who both fell in the late war, — the former in the battle of Cedar Creek, and the latter at Nelson's Farm, in Virginia. These young men had but just reaped the very highest collegiate honors which Harvard has to bestow on her sons at graduating, when at the call of duty they gave themselves for their country; thus adding, let us think, as much lustre to the name they bore as if they had lived in peace at home to fulfil the brilliant promise of their youth. I must not omit here the mention of a kinsman of these young men, of the Lowell stock on the maternal side, — Lieutenant William Lowell Putnam, who was killed in battle at Ball's Bluff. In the remembrance of their common friends he is always associated with his two cousins, as their peer in the admirable traits of their characters, and in the heroic spirit of self-sacrifice by which they were animated.

Others who have borne or still bear the same name with honor might be mentioned, but I have taken liberties enough with private biographies.

And now, Mr. Chairman, we shall look to you and your associates and successors to give all diligence to make this school worthy of the name it is privileged to bear. We shall hope that among the successive generations of its pupils, as they shall be told, which they should be, the meaning of the origin and name of their school, some will be found so susceptible to the inspiring influence of shining examples as to derive from that name some quickening incentives to diligence and zeal to study, to purity of behavior, and in the highest aims and aspirations; and so begin here to raise themselves to the true American peerage, as illustrated in this sketch, — aristocracy of intellect and character, of public usefulness and personal worth.

REMARKS OF MR. HOBBS.

In behalf of the District Committee I accept these symbols of authority over the building, with an appreciating sense of the responsibility imposed upon us. Without, however, dwelling upon that, allow me, sir, as well for the committee as for the parents residing in the district, the children who are to occupy these seats and the teachers, to thank you, and through you the citizens of Boston, for the prompt response to the wants of the district, and for furnishing them with so spacious, elegant and costly a structure. It but sustains the reputation of our city. No call is ever made upon the city of Boston to assist its youth in their education which remains unanswered. Every facility is furnished lavishly, without stint, and without regard to cost, and it is to be hoped it reaps and has reaped its reward, as it sees the scores of honorable men and true women who have successively graduated from her schools, and have mingled in the communities, near and far distant, and become their most-trusted and honored citizens, pointing back with feelings of glowing patriotism and honest pride to these scenes, these halls, these fields of opportunity and saying, here were planted the germs that formed our characters and graced our manhood; to the principles here instilled and incentives here given, we owe all, whatever may be the charge reposed in us.

Then, delivering the keys to Mr. Jones, the master of the school, he said: —

Upon you, sir, falls the main responsibility; ours is divided, yours is single. Upon you alone rests the keeping of the characters and consciences of these children. As you sow will the harvest be. Your long and faithful service, your well-known zeal in your vocation, your success, the experience and earnestness of your assistants, the general good reputation of your pupils, all assure us that the confidence has not been misplaced, that the purposes of which this structure is now dedicated will be subserved, that the responsibility will be fairly met and stoutly borne.

And in passing these keys into your hands, I know of no more fitting words to address to you than those which have just been addressed to me and my associates. In them is comprehended the sum of your duty. In them is shown the standard of excellence which should be your aim.

And certainly we can learn our duty from no purer lips, and draw our inspiration from no nobler example.

RESPONSE OF THE MASTER.

Mr. Daniel W. Jones, the Master, received the keys, and spoke as follows: —

Mr. Chairman, — I thank you for your kind words of counsel and commendation. I fully realize the trust committed to me at this time. It is a great responsibility, and I shall need your help often. You have been my committee for nine years. During all that period you have listened to my troubles with great kindness and patience. I have appreciated your counsel and your confidence in me. I shall try so to improve myself and direct the affairs of this school as to merit your continued approval.

It is with feelings of pleasure that I receive the keys, and also of anxiety, for when I consider what the city has done in the erection of this beautiful building, and how well it is furnished in all its parts; its beautiful surroundings, over which will be wafted to us the pure air of heaven; the help I shall receive from good committees; when I consider all these things, together with the excellent corps of experienced teachers provided to assist me, I feel that the fault will be mine, if the Lowell School be not a good school.

Then, turning to the audience, he said: —

Friends, to you, the people of this community, this occasion must be a very interesting one. For fifteen years I have been personally acquainted with your want of school privileges. Your little ones have been cooped up in seven-by-nine rooms, where the air was not unlike the gruel, "thick and slab," which boiled in the witches' cauldron; and then those that lived through the Primary School were obliged to walk away off over Parker Hill to the Comins. At last the city fathers have answered you nobly, and I assure you, Mr. Mayor, that for this building you have the thanks of an intelligent and appreciating community.

This structure is here, and speaks for itself. In the construction of the building much attention has been paid to the laws of health. Its rooms are high-storied and well lighted. There is no room but that is purified by the sun's rays. We have double windows to all the rooms, which can be so arranged as to admit fresh air without the cold currents which shorten the lives of so many of our little ones. We also have a good system of ventilation. The building committee have provided against any possible accident from fire. If you will visit the basement you will find it fireproof. See this beautiful hall, radiant with sunlight and intelligent faces. Look out in any direction and the soul is filled with pleasure. You have adorned its walls most munificently. These pictures will not only be a pleasure to the eye of thousands of children, but they cannot fail to exert a healthy moral influence. That our characters are modified by surrounding objects, both animate and inanimate, is a law as fixed as gravitation. You have given these pictures to yourselves for your children. I thank you for thus expressing your interest in the welfare of this school.

Parents, the committee have entrusted to my custody these keys. You commit to my direction the immortal minds of your dear children. They will meet here day after day, month after month, and year after year, to receive the impress which these surroundings and our characters shall give them. We are to inspire them with a high sense of justice, we are to imbue them with a deep reverence for goodness, and give a right direction to their thoughts. In this high and glorious work parents and teachers must work together; there must be no pulling in opposite directions. You must visit us often, and let us commune together freely on the best interests of these children.

It takes a peculiar man to be just the right sort of a teacher. He is an article compounded of various ingredients. There never was but one perfect teacher; Him we must be content to follow; so you must not expect to find perfection in any of the teachers of this school. A teacher should not be blamed for other people's sins. It is sometimes said that a teacher takes the child as the sculptor takes the marble from the quarry; but there is one important difference; when the sculptor leaves his work for rest or relaxation the half-formed statuary remains as he left it.

The pupil is never found as he was left. He is worked upon by other hands, and excrescences burst forth which cannot be chipped off with hammer and chisel. Silently and unobserved, mysterious influences are at work in the street, at noonday, and under the quiet stars. Let us watch our children carefully. The character which promises to reveal in the beauty and symmetry of its proportions an Apollo, may be touched by the spoiler and become a Caliban of misshaped ugliness. While, therefore, we as teachers will endeavor, term by term, to do better and better, we at the same time ask you to co-operate with us most heartily, and we beg you to leaven your strictures and denunciations with the heavenly grace of charity.

A hymn was then sung by the children, with fine effect, beginning: —

"Grateful be, grateful be for God's mercies, rich and free!"

Very brief and good congratulatory addresses were made by Rev. John W. Olmstead and Mr. L. M. Chase, principal of the Dudley School. After which the exercises were concluded with appropriate singing by the children.
